The character aliases edit descriptions of Dr. Ian Malcolm edit descriptions of this character edit descriptions of this character are not relevant to the rest of the text which is about classic works of literary fiction. 1. Louisa May Alcott's Little Women, published in 1868, is a timeless coming-of-age story that follows the lives of the four March sisters - Jo, Meg, Beth, and Amy. It's a fictionalized account of Alcott's own life and her relationship with her sisters as they navigate their way through girlhood to young womanhood. 2. Madeleine L'Engle's A Wrinkle in Time is a beloved science fiction novel that tells the story of high schooler Meg Murry and her journey through time and space with her brother Charles Wallace and friend Calvin O'Keefe, all in an attempt to rescue their father from an evil being on another planet. 3. Toni Morrison's Song of Solomon is a 1977 work of literary fiction that recounts the life and death of Macon "Milkman" Dead III, a Black man struggling with his identity and history as he navigates through Michigan over three decades. 4. Stephen King's Carrie is a horror novel centered on 16-year-old Carrie White whose story unfolds through fictional letters, newspaper articles, and magazine stories as she uses her telekinetic powers to exact revenge on those who bullied her. 5. Tommy Orange's There There chronicles the lives of Native Americans living in Oakland, California, as they prepare for an urban powwow, highlighting their struggles with addiction, mental illness, and unemployment while also celebrating their rich spirituality and purpose. I've finally decided to read the original book that my friend Sandra has been urging me to do for ages. She thinks it's one of her favourites and that the book is better than the movies, but I'd never gotten around to it before. Recently, I was feeling bored at home, so I watched some of the Jurassic Park movies again to pass the time. The next day, I saw a Twitter thread about which movies are actually better than their source novels, and one of them mentioned Jurassic Park - really? I thought that's not what Sandra said! So, I decided to find out for myself and rectify my lack of reading habits as an avid book lover who hasn't read a Michael Crichton book before. I ditched my pre-planned list for the #20BooksOfSummer challenge and took Jurassic Park with me on my recent holiday in Cornwall. Despite thinking I knew the story, I was hooked from start to finish and devoured it quickly, despite some reasonable demands from my partner to spend quality time with him. The book is very readable, especially if you've seen the movies, due to its short chapters, which helped me read at a good pace. I also enjoyed comparing it to the movies and spotting familiar bits of the story as well as differences. The writing in the book is fantastic, and that's why I'm now eager to read more Michael Crichton novels after being hooked by his style. The books are more detailed and complex than the movies, with some characters different from their film counterparts and some plot twists that work effectively for the story. The Enduring Enigma of Dinosaur Fascination Why do children (and adults alike) obsess over dinosaurs, blurting out intricate Latin names with gusto? Despite extensive contemplation, the underlying reason remains elusive to me. Nonetheless, it's undeniable that dinosaurs captivate imaginations globally. Over the years, I've toyed with various theories: - Nationalistic Interest: Perhaps countries where dinosaur skeletons are found have a unique affinity? Yet, Japan, devoid of such discoveries, is equally enthralled. - Childish Whimsy: Observations in museums reveal adults are just as fascinated, often using children as an excuse to indulge in dinosaur exhibits. - Juvenile Subculture: My own daughter's pre-preschool, pre-verbal interest in dinosaurs contradicts this theory. - Magnitude and Extinction: The allure isn't solely due to their massive size (smaller dinosaurs and toys are equally appealing) or their extinction status (children often don't fully grasp this concept). A Literary Intersection Michael Crichton's latest novel is his most gripping to date, weaving a "breathtaking adventure" (Time Out) on a remote jungle island where genetic engineers have successfully cloned dinosaurs using recovered DNA. This fantastical realization, however, has a dark underbelly. About the Author Michael Crichton (1942–2008), renowned for bestsellers like The Terminal Man, Jurassic Park, and Sphere, among others, has sold over 200 million copies worldwide, translated into 40 languages, inspiring 15 feature films. A polymath, he directed Westworld, Coma, and created the hit series ER, uniquely achieving simultaneous number one status in literature, cinema, and television. Each successive calendar cycle. Repeated periods of time passing in succession.
