Market Review

- Geopolitical tensions remained elevated, with UK political risk re-emerging, although improving prospects for a US-Iran ceasefire helped support market sentiment. Global data reflected the economic impact of higher energy prices across several regions. Most fixed income sectors posted positive excess returns.
- Global sovereign yields experienced heightened volatility, driven by uncertainty relating to the growth and inflation impact of the Middle East conflict. Yields rose sharply in early May, reflecting stronger inflation data before retracing lower as reports of progress in the US-Iran negotiations improved market sentiment. US Treasury yields finished the month higher, and the yield curve flattened as markets have priced out near-term rate cuts and are now pricing in rate hikes later in the year. In Europe, yields initially rose on energy-driven inflation concerns but then reversed, with German Bunds rallying as geopolitical risks eased and rate expectations came down. In the UK, a combination of softer inflation prints, and a weakening labour market added to domestic growth concerns, allowing gilts to outperform into month-end.
- Throughout May, high-yield bonds generated positive total returns. Performance by credit quality was mixed, with B-rated bonds posting the strongest returns, followed by BB and CCC-rated bonds. Bank loans generated positive returns for the month, with credit-quality performance again mixed. Emerging markets (EM) external debt generated positive returns – spread narrowing aided performance, while an increase in US Treasury yields weighed on results.
- Most major central banks kept their policy rates on hold as energy-driven inflation risks remained elevated.

Underlying Fund Performance and Attribution

- The Underlying Fund generated a positive return during the month of May.
- The Underlying Fund's allocation to EM debt was one of the top positive contributors to performance overall. EM corporate exposure added to results, with positive contributions from high yield issuers primarily across financials. EM sovereign and local debt also aided results benefiting from narrower spreads during the period, partially offset by headwinds from higher US Treasury and EM yields.
- Positioning within global high yield was the largest positive contributor to the Underlying Fund's performance, driven primarily by real estate and development issuers within financial institutions, as well as industrials. An allocation to bank loans also aided the Underlying Fund's results, led by industrial issuers. An allocation to convertible bonds was also beneficial, led by software services and semiconductor sectors.
- Developed governments had a small positive impact on the Underlying Fund's results, as modest gains in US Treasury positioning were offset by weakness in non-US developed government exposures. An allocation to Treasury Inflation Protected Securities (TIPS) was a small positive contribution during the period.
- Within securitised sectors, allocations to non-agency residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS), agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS), and asset-backed securities (ABS) benefited the Underlying Fund's performance, while commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) were broadly flat during the month.

Underlying Fund Positioning and Outlook

- Fiscal stimulus, Artificial Intelligence (AI) investment, deregulation, and accommodative monetary policy continue to underpin growth. However, the impact of these policies is uneven, and political volatility keeps the macroeconomic backdrop unsettled. Inflation remains elevated due to ongoing supply shocks, with energy-driven price pressures expected to persist even as their impact on growth proves more limited. The Wellington Management team believes EM country fundamentals are well supported by manageable balance of payment positions, improving fiscal deficits, and supportive commodity prices. Sovereign hard currency spreads appear somewhat tight and therefore EM exposure is limited to high conviction turnaround stories. The team allocates to EM corporate issuers with prudent balance sheet management in select sectors and targets the most attractive opportunities in below-investment-grade issuers.
- Within structured finance, the Wellington Management team believes consumer fundamentals remain supportive overall, though deteriorating for the lower income cohort, and expects to see gradual labour market deterioration. The team favours seasoned residential mortgages and remains opportunistic in buying dislocated commercial mortgages and collateralised loan obligations.
