5-Day Bible Reading Plan and Devotional Guide: Devoted to Serve

---

Day 1: The Foundation of Devotion

Reading: Acts 2:42-47

Devotional: The early church did not serve out of obligation or personal gain. They served because they were first devoted to God. Everything they did flowed from that central commitment. Before you can pour into others, your own relationship with the Lord must be nourished. A cup that is empty has nothing to offer. Today, examine the foundation of your own devotion. Are you spending time in Scripture, in prayer, in worship? When your relationship with God is the root of your service, your motives become pure and your capacity to give becomes limitless.

Reflection: What does your daily time with God currently look like, and what is one specific step you can take to deepen it?

Day 2: The Motive Behind the Ministry

Reading: Philippians 2:1-11

Devotional: Serving with the wrong motive is like building a house on sand. It may look impressive for a time, but when inconvenience, ingratitude, or correction arrives, the structure collapses. In Philippians 2, Paul calls believers to serve with humility, considering the interests of others above their own. This is not a suggestion but a command rooted in the example of Christ himself, who humbled himself completely in obedience to the Father. Your motives reveal the true condition of your heart. Ask yourself honestly today whether you are serving to be seen, to gain something, or to genuinely glorify God.

Reflection: Think of a recent moment when serving became inconvenient. What did your response reveal about your motives?

Day 3: Generosity as Worship

Reading: 2 Corinthians 9:6-8

Devotional: Generosity is not limited to finances. The early church gave their time, their skills, their possessions, and their homes. They recognized that everything they had belonged to God and held it with an open hand. True generosity flows from a heart that has been transformed by grace. When you understand how much God has given you through the sacrifice of Christ, giving to others becomes a natural response of gratitude. Today, take inventory of what God has entrusted to you. Consider not just your bank account but your schedule, your talents, and your home. Where is God calling you to give more freely?

Reflection: In what area of your life is God calling you to practice greater generosity this week?

Day 4: The Power of Community

Reading: Hebrews 10:24-25

Devotional: Isolation is one of the enemy's most effective strategies. When believers withdraw from community, they become vulnerable, discouraged, and spiritually weakened. The early church understood this and refused to forsake gathering together. Fellowship was not a program or an event to attend; it was a way of life. They ate together, prayed together, and bore one another's burdens. Community is where iron sharpens iron, where faith is strengthened, and where the broken find healing. You were not designed to walk this road alone. Lean into the community God has placed around you, and be willing to let others lean into you.

Reflection: Is there someone in your church community you have been keeping at a distance? What would it look like to take one step toward deeper relationship this week?

Day 5: A Life That Preaches

Reading: Matthew 5:14-16

Devotional: The early church did not grow because of a marketing strategy. It grew because the way they lived was undeniably different. Their devotion to God, their generosity, their hospitality, and their care for one another became a visible testimony that drew people toward Christ. As Mark 10:45 reminds us, Jesus came not to be served but to serve. When your life reflects that same posture, it becomes a sermon that no one can argue with. People are watching how you handle hardship, how you treat strangers, and how you love your family. Let your life be a worship that opens doors for the gospel.

Reflection: What is one area of your daily life where you can more intentionally reflect the character of Christ to those around you?
