5-Day Bible Reading Plan and Devotional Guide

Based on 1 Peter 2:11-17 and the Themes of Identity, Exile, and Kingdom Living

---

Day 1: You Are Not What You Have Done

Reading: 1 Peter 2:9-10

Devotional: Before Peter tells his readers how to live, he tells them who they are. They are chosen, called, claimed, and shown mercy. This order matters enormously. So much of the Christian life gets reversed when we believe that our behavior earns our identity rather than flows from it. You are not primarily defined by your failures, your roles, your accomplishments, or your wounds. You are God's possession. You have received mercy. When you wake up tomorrow, before the day tells you who you are, let God's Word speak first. Identity shapes behavior. Let the right voice go first.

Day 2: Living as a Stranger in a Familiar Place

Reading: 1 Peter 1:17-21

Devotional: Peter describes believers as temporary residents passing through a world that is not their final home. This is not an invitation to detachment or indifference. It is a call to clarity. When you know where you ultimately belong, you are freed from the desperate need to cling to everything around you. The things that once defined you, status, comfort, approval, no longer have the final word. You can hold them loosely. You can engage your neighborhood, your workplace, and your family with open hands rather than clenched fists. Knowing where home is makes you more present, not less, wherever God has placed you today.

Day 3: Freedom That Serves

Reading: Galatians 5:13-14

Devotional: Peter warns against using freedom as a cover for evil. True freedom, the kind that the gospel produces, does not look for loopholes. It does not ask how little it can give. The person genuinely transformed by grace becomes someone who uses freedom to serve rather than to escape responsibility. This is one of the clearest marks that the gospel has done real work in a person's life. The question worth sitting with today is not simply what you are free from, but what you are free for. Freedom in Christ always moves toward others. It always looks something like love.

Day 4: Doing Good in a World That Misunderstands You

Reading: 1 Peter 2:12, Matthew 5:14-16

Devotional: Peter urges believers to live honorably among those who do not share their faith, so that even those who speak against them might eventually see their good deeds and give glory to God. This is a long-game vision of witness. It does not demand immediate recognition or vindication. It simply asks you to keep doing good, keep serving, keep showing up with integrity, even when it goes unnoticed or misread. Jesus told his disciples that a lamp exists to give light. You were not placed in your specific neighborhood, office, or family by accident. Shine steadily. Let God handle the outcome.

Day 5: Participating in Restoration, Not Waiting for Escape

Reading: Revelation 21:1-5, Romans 8:19-21

Devotional: The hope of Scripture is not that God will abandon creation but that he will renew it. The kingdom Jesus inaugurated is moving toward completion, and his people are invited to participate in that movement now. Feeding the hungry, pursuing justice, welcoming the lonely, forgiving enemies, and telling the truth are not merely nice things to do while waiting for heaven. They are the work of the kingdom breaking into the present. God has placed you somewhere specific this week. That placement is an assignment. Live there as someone who belongs to Jesus, and carry the life of his kingdom into every corner of your ordinary day.
