

Investment Objective

The objective of the Latitude Horizon Fund is to deliver capital appreciation over the long term by holding a concentrated portfolio of stocks, whilst lowering the equity risk and enhancing returns through a selection of non-equity investments.

January Commentary

Reading the newspapers these days is an exercise in endurance.

The front pages serialise the Donald Trump show, as he flexes every political muscle he has, both at home and abroad.

His limitless ambition makes it clear one thing won't change. Populism doesn't come cheap, wide deficits will remain a feature of his administration, and money supply will keep growing.

Business sections narrate the raging bull market, and the benefits that this liquidity bestows on it.

Columnists are fighting to distinguish between AI "winners" and "losers", without much clarity. Meanwhile, connected to the AI trade, tip sheets are pumping gold and mining stocks, as beneficiaries of the new tech infrastructure build-out, as well as a solution to the money printing problem.

Gold has risen, and fallen, 20% already this year, demonstrating its strength as a store of value.

The economic editor notes that the political satirists have been retired, as reality too closely resembles their contributions. They join the growing unemployment queues which, despite the bull market, hover around concerning levels.

Obituaries are being written for software companies around the globe.

Schumpeter presides over this funeral procession through Silicon Valley, as firms in excellent health only a year ago are deemed redundant today.

They are survived by many "old economy" stocks who remain in good health as their genuine competitive advantages are revaluated in this new world.

The best of times and the worst of times. Certainly not the time to be making strong predictions about the future.

Our ambition is to build portfolios which will protect and prosper over time, even amidst the rapid market disruption and dislocation which we are currently witnessing.

The investment world echoes the real world in its increasing polarisation, yet we believe the middle ground is actually the most fertile.
