

Investment Objective

The objective of the Latitude Horizon Fund is to deliver capital appreciation over the long term by holding a concentrated portfolio of stocks, whilst lowering the equity risk and enhancing returns through a selection of non-equity investments.

July Commentary

Still waters run deep.

The relative stability of global markets masks a truly remarkable level of volatility beneath the surface.

Markets remain dominated by the AI trade, most notably led by the share prices of memory stocks. This month alone we saw many days where shares in Micron and SK Hynix swung up or down by 10-20% per day.

Microsoft and Amazon rose 20% in the last two days of the month, while Apple fell -10%.

It’s clear to us that positioning is at extremes, which is always the precursor to “shocking” moves such as these. It’s also clear that investors seem increasingly unsure about the eventual winners and losers in this arms race.

This sub-surface volatility is evident across sectors and asset classes.

This month alone, shares in Intercontinental Exchange, Sony, and Shell rose almost 20%, without any major fundamental justification other than the valuation discounts they each trade at.

Oil moved 5% almost every day as Trump oscillated between war and peace. Having fallen 25% from the highs, gold was a rare beacon of stability.

Government bond yields rose to levels not seen since 2008, and currencies weren’t spared as the Yen rose 4% on news of coordinated intervention between the US and Japan.

Charting a course through these macro waves is of increasing importance, and portfolio construction should be at the forefront of investors’ minds, just at the time when many appear to be chasing the recent momentum.
