The Lost Piper

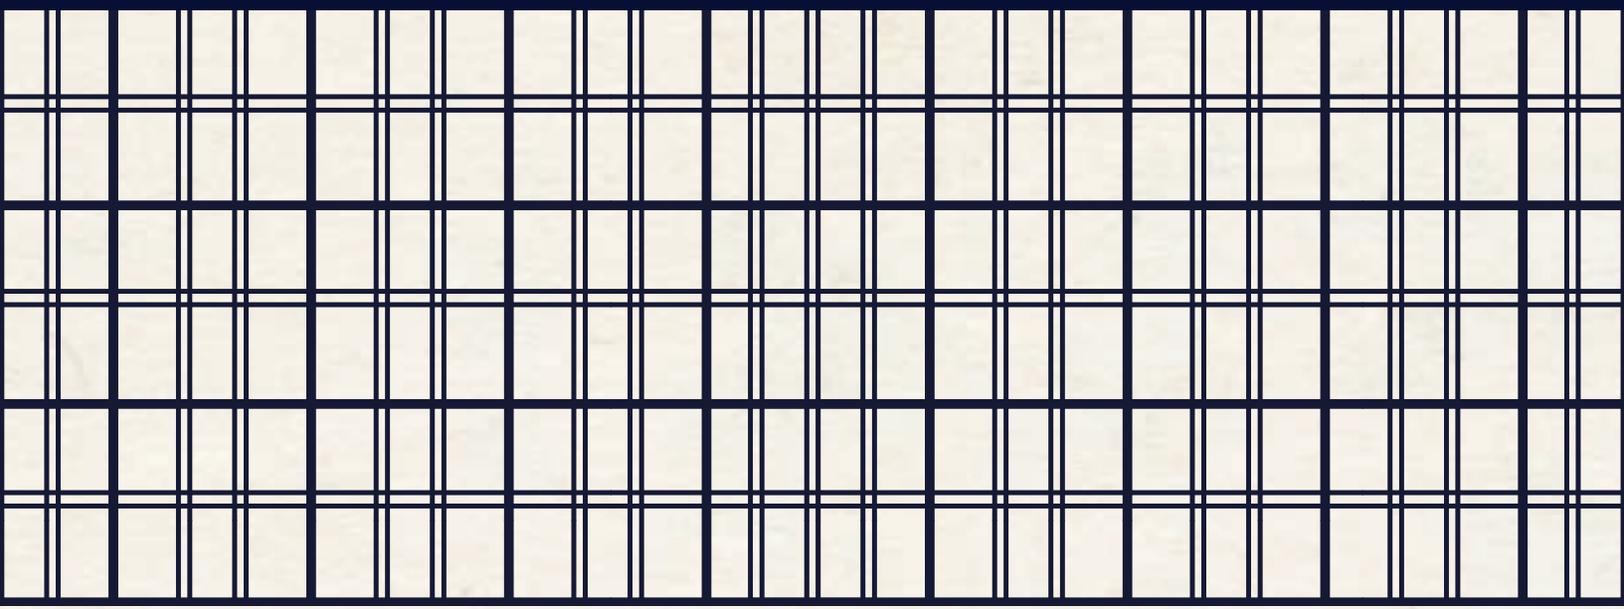

One of Edinburgh's best known ghost stories concerns a young bagpiper who disappeared without a trace. Back in the day, a secret tunnel was discovered beneath Edinburgh Castle, heading down the Royal Mile towards Holyrood House. As the opening to the tunnel was so small, a young boy was sent down with his bagpipes to investigate. He played the pipes loudly as he walked through the tunnel, so people above ground could work out where the tunnel went.

Around the Tron Kirk the shrill of the pipes stopped. Despite search parties being sent to find the boy, he was never seen again. With the piper presumed dead, the tunnel was blocked up - but many people still report hearing the faint, ghostly sound of underground bagpipes to this day. When you visit our toilets, listen carefully, you just might hear the faint sound of the lost piper boy playing on his chanter.....

Witch trials at Edinburgh Castle

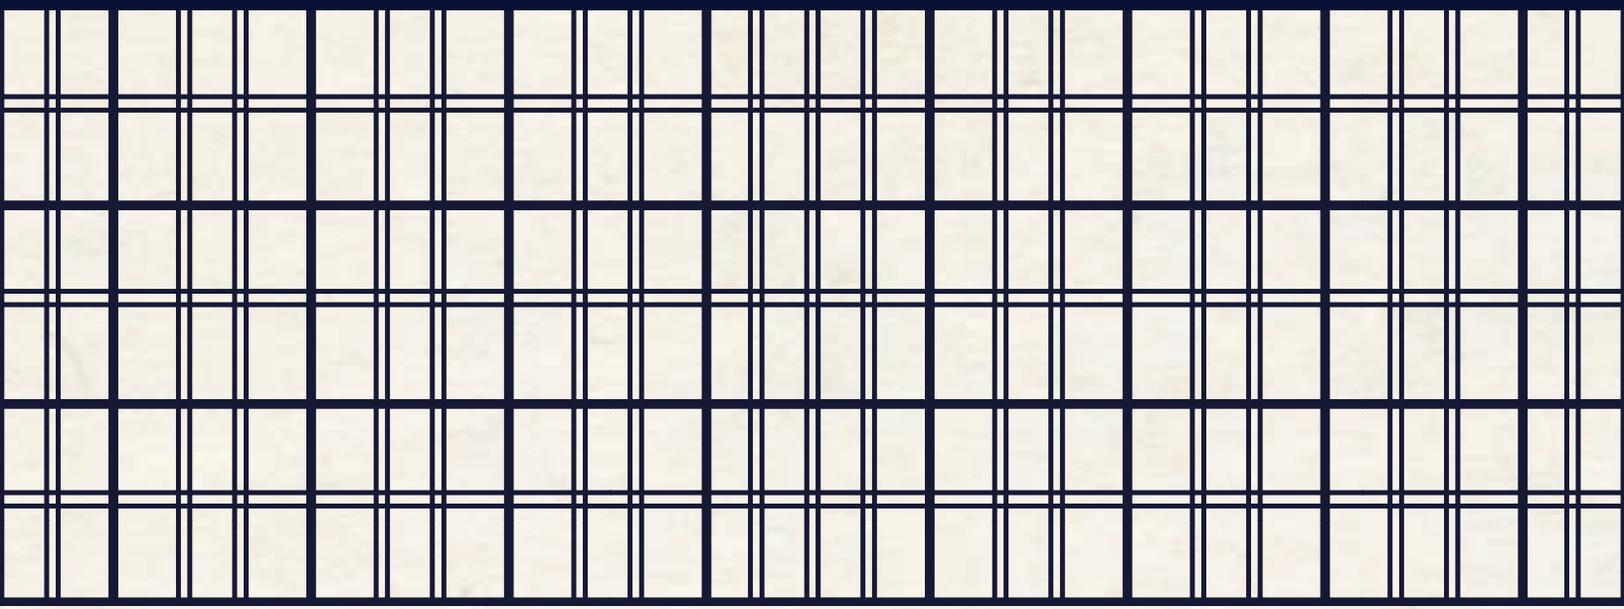

Edinburgh Castle was a key location when witchcraft hysteria swept across Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries. Around 300 alleged witches were imprisoned and tortured in the Tolbooth, just around the corner from this very pub and at Edinburgh Castle, before being executed on Castlehill. One of the most famous 'witches' was Lady Janet Douglas of Glamis, who was accused of witchcraft and conspiring to kill King James V. Her servants had been tortured into confessing her guilt and in 1537 she was burnt alive at the stake - with her young son forced to watch.

Visitors to the castle have reported seeing the ghostly figure of Lady Janet roaming the halls and weeping. There have also been stories of a hollow knocking sound heard at night, attributed to ghostly workmen building the platform on which she was burnt. People have even claimed to see shadowy figures and ghostly orbs in the dungeon where people like Lady Janet's servants (as well as prisoners of war and enemy spies) were tortured and left to die.

The Death Coach of the Royal Mile

A Death Coach was a horse drawn carriage traveling around cities collecting souls of the sadly departed. Edinburgh had it's very own Death Coach which usually travelled around the Royal Mile and surrounding areas in the Old Town. It was described by those who had seen it as a glowing, ghostly carriage drawn by black horses. Sightings of the Death Coach on Royal Mile are believed to signal an imminent disaster in the city. Keep your eyes and ears peeled!
