Ezus launches Web-Page: the travel programme becomes a web document

A feature that turns an Ezus project into a document readable on mobile and exportable as a PDF.

Paris, June 2025

Ezus is launching Web-Page, a feature that turns the content of a project into a web document readable on desktop, tablet and mobile. The software provider for travel agencies, DMCs and tour operators is opening it to accounts on request, with a template installed to their brand.

In bespoke travel, the programme still circulates as a PDF or a slide deck. The traveller opens it on a phone, where those formats read badly: zooming, scrolling sideways, hunting for the information. And once the file is sent, it is frozen. The smallest correction means regenerating the document and sending it again.

What Web-Page brings

- The document is generated from the project. From the Documents tab, the user picks Web Page, selects a template and names the page. Content already entered is reused: destination, itinerary, accommodation, transport, activities. No re-entry.
- Readable on every screen. Generated pages are responsive, designed for desktop, tablet and mobile.
- PDF export stays available, with configurable formatting. Web-Page does not remove the PDF, it stops it being the only option.
- Itinerary, voucher or roadmap: the same mechanism covers the different documents handed to travellers.
- Templates in the agency's colours, customisable through dynamic variables, with extra fields available on request.
- A template gallery to view and select those available on the account.

"The programme is the moment the traveller pictures their trip. Sending it in a format designed for print loses that moment. A web page is read on the train, shared with the family, and stays up to date."

Charles Gombert, co-founder and CEO of Ezus

Availability

Web-Page is not enabled by default. Activation is requested from the Customer Success Manager or the Ezus account owner. An HTML template must be installed by the Ezus team before the first generation.

About Ezus
