Greetings Airrows!

Good afternoon. Bears often show up in Native American stories as symbols of strength, wisdom and healing and who couldn't use more this in today's age? In this issue learn about one awe-inspiring place to safely see grizzly bears: Tweedsmuir Park Lodge in British Columbia's Great Bear Rainforest. Also take in the complex work of an artist whose love of nature is finding expression in technical installations, and learn about local efforts to spur carbon removal springing up in the American West.

Insider Travel Tip: Bella Coola's Tweedsmuir Park Lodge

Along central British Columbia's coast there is a place called Bella Coola, so named for the Nuxalk people, who settled here 10,000 years ago and continue to live in this area today. Bella Coola is in the heart of the mythically named Great Bear Rainforest, and when I go I'll stay in the Tweedsmuir Park Lodge, where newest Tomorrow's Air partner Bella Coola Heli Sports bases its summer time grizzly viewing safari. The company operates in Bella Coola's Coast Mountains, with both summer and winter offerings. Starting this July, guests contributing to Tomorrow's Air will have their contribution matched by the company.

I love this for the chance see a grizzly, to walk through the exotic old growth forest, to drift down the Atnarko river with snow capped peaks overhead. You can also hear about travel journalist, photographer, and Tomorrow's Air supporter Jonny Bierman's experience of the Great Bear Rainforest in episode 9 of the Airrows on Air podcast, here.

TOMORROWS AIR

When I first came across Claudia Bueno's work I was mesmerized. Her large scale installations use lights, motors, circuits, sound, wind, and video along with detailed drawings and meticulous cutouts to create whole worlds that visitors call 'hypnotic.'

At Meow Wolf's space in Las Vegas her piece 'Pulse' is made up of a multitude of white line drawings that are meticulously intertwined and superimposed on 60 glass panels. I find her work a provocative meditation on nature and technology together.

She sees her work as a celebration of life and creation, and has been gracious enough to lend her work to the education and awareness building + carbon removal mission of Tomorrow's Air.

Watch for us on social; I look forward to introducing more of her pieces in the coming months!

Carbon Removal In The News

One of my favorite recent articles on carbon removal comes from Holly Jean Buck, writing for Sierra, the magazine of the Sierra Club. Speaking in plain english about the realities of what net zero really means, the article is most persuasive in its encouragement for all of us to keep engaging in the topic, noting that it is not only a question of how we remove carbon from the atmosphere, but also who will get to make all the decisions, observing that grassroots advocacy is vital to developing carbon removal in the public interest.

The other piece of news that delighted me recently was the news that Boulder County has joined with City of Flagstaff to create the Four Corners Carbon Coalition to shape municipal commitments to carbon removal. Susie Strife, Boulder County's director of climate action observed in an article for The Hill, "This coalition, representing cities and counties in Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah allows us to punch above our weight and drive rapid progress on CDR." Municipal efforts may seem small, but they are vital in setting precedent for larger efforts, and helping build momentum for carbon removal.

Until Next Time

We know we need to evolve how we travel, and we know we need to clean up. Thanks for learning about climate conscious travel and carbon removal with Tomorrow's Air, encouraging your friends to follow via Instagram, Facebook and LinkedIn, and considering joining with a monthly membership or as company partner.

I'm always interested to hear what's on your mind, so feel free to reach out: christina@tomorrowsair.com.

Onward!
