

Grammarian: Come up with new regions

In groups, come up with a region that represents a clause element (either subject, verb, direct object, indirect object, adverbial, or subject complement).

Example: There once was a region called Subjectivia, and the only thing its inhabitants wanted was to be famous and play the lead role in every movie (because the subject is the main part of the sentence).

Present your idea to the rest of the class, and let them guess which grammatical function your region represents.
