Govt won't rule out Chateau demolition – Kirton reiterates: it must be saved

The Coalition Government won't rule out demolishing or "decommissioning" the Chateau Tongariro, despite a petition led by the local mayor to save and restore the historic building.

Ruapehu's mayor Weston Kirton has welcomed the Government's response to his written submission in support of Council's Parliamentary Petition to Save the Chateau Tongariro Hotel, describing it as encouraging but that he would like to have seen more ambition and commitment to securing the future of the iconic Chateau Tongariro Hotel.

"I'm pleased the Government has confirmed a transparent, time-bound process to engage with iwi and investors about restoring and operating the Chateau as a hotel again," Kirton said.

"That commitment matters, and it reflects what the community, iwi, and the tourism sector have been calling for."

However, Kirton said it was concerning that demolition or decommissioning remain options, despite strong and credible interest from proven investor-developers.

"This is a $100 million-plus restoration project with enormous economic upside – new jobs, training and specialist skills, regional growth, iwi partnership and the protection of one of New Zealand's most significant heritage buildings. With that level of opportunity, demolition should not be treated as a fallback position."

Lease change

Kirton also questioned the Government's statement that it is not proposing changes to policy or lease settings under current conservation legislation.

"That position feels premature given the current review of the National Parks Act 1980 and the Conservation Act 1987 as part of a broader reform of how public conservation land is governed, managed and used," he said.

"Government has publicly signalled that conservation law reform is about enabling more appropriate economic activity on public conservation land – including making it easier to obtain concessions for tourism and infrastructure, reducing unnecessary red tape, and supporting jobs and growth in the regions.

"The Chateau is exactly the type of project the Government says it wants: heritage protection, iwi partnership, regional economic development, and tourism growth – all in one. In that context, changes to policy and lease setting should not be ruled out before the process has even been completed."

He said if Government is determined to work within existing legislation, it should be prepared to be a long-term financial partner in the project.

"The Crown is already carrying significant holding costs. Co-investment –

Raetihi Marae hosts Waitangi day of unity

The Raetihi Marae Trust wanted to "do something for the community" for Waitangi Day and, judging by the numbers and many happy faces, they succeeded beyond expectations.

Around 500 people attended Te Ra o Waitangi event – Kote Whakaorahi Kite Whakapono – "a place for contemplation, faith, and insight".

The day was planned to be an inclusive event for the whole community, explains Marae chairman Brendon Morgan.

Recognising Chinese heritage

"We wanted to showcase the Chinese community of the area," says Brendon.

"The Chinese families have been here for generations and make up the fabric of the community as much as Māori and Pakeha."

Kim Young – a member of one of the big market gardening families of the district – was interviewed during the day, by emcee and Marae trustee Elijah Pue.

The idea was to share the stories of the generations of families who have worked on the lands, the Young whānau arrival and their connection to the community.

Other Marae trustees involved were Viv Hoeta, who looked after the vendors as well as the kaumatau; Polly Kareko Condon organised the kapa haka food, and Heleni Misiloi led the hikoi and the steps class.

Raetihi Marae hosts Waitangi day of unity

Brendon said the event had been months in the planning, with financial support from the Marae and Te Manatu Taonga.

Annual event

He said the Trust decided, after a recap of the day, to make it an annual event at the Raetihi Marae.

The day included 17 stalls including kai, arts and crafts and information stands.

There was also a steps class to help promote Hauora (health) that was enjoyed by young and old.

The Hauora hikoi started at the Mākōtuku Bridge, following the Mākōtuku walkway to the beginning of the native bush entrance, then turned and headed to the marae where the arrival of the hikoi, mihi whakatau and karakia opened the day of celebration.

Among the vendors were organisations raising funds for their activities, including Waimarino Shears, Jacqui Haitana raising funds for Steelie Hammonds rugby trip to Japan, and Te Pāriha o Raetihi Temepara (temple) restoration project.

The vendors included Kim Young and Sons kai cart and veges; Charm Thai food; Monica Battersby's eggs; Damien MacDonnell's venison; slushies with Chaana-Jaye, Daryl, Ihaka and Ngatīrīa; Berry Sweet Strawberries; and Sylvia Dickson selling wooden kai boards.

There was also the Te Kāhui Kaumātua morning tea, with something sweet, something savoury, bric a brac Rongoā Māori (traditional healing), raising funds for their trip to Rarotonga this year.

There were also iwi expo spaces, from Ngāti Rangi, Nga Tangata Tiaki and Ngāporo Waimarino Forest Trust.

Govt won't rule out Chateau demolition as Government has done with other major heritage restorations — would demonstrate real commitment and help unlock private investment."

He said the message from Ruapehu, the tourism sector and the thousands of petition signatories is clear.

"This is a project of national significance with regional benefits that extend far beyond Ruapehu.

"Restoration of the Chateau would be a major win demonstrating leadership in heritage protection, effective partnership with iwi, while unlocking regional economic growth and employment."

Government response to petition

In the Government Response to the Petition document, the Government says the building requires considerable investment including strengthening and restoration to make it fit for use as a hotel once more.

The Department of Conservation has been caretaking and securing the building at a significant annual cost since the lease ended in early 2023."

It is estimated that annual cost is about $2 million.

"The Minister of Conservation (Tama Potaka) has directed the Department of Conservation to engage with interested commercial parties and Iwi regarding the terms for restoration and operation of the Chateau as a hotel once again.

"We have committed to a transparent, time-bound process. The Department of Conservation is engaging with Iwi and investors."

Potaka intends to seek requests for proposals from parties "to fund strengthening and restoration of the Chateau as a hotel" in early 2026.

"The responses to the request for proposals will identify the commercial viability of restoring and operating the hotel."

He said the Government is not proposing to "carve the Chateau out of the National Park".

"The Government has not taken any options off the table: demolition, decommissioning, or restoration via a private operator are all potential options."

"The Government does not recommend that any changes are made in response to this petition. This is because the Government response outlined above means that the recommended changes are not necessary or are already provided for."

The Chateau Tongariro – an iconic feature of the Tongariro National Park landscape and a Category 1 Historic Place. Despite this status, the Government won't rule out possible demolition of the much-loved building.

Government's fault

• Phillip Harvey's suggestion that Council produced an emergency works pamphlet as some kind of psychological conditioning exercise for a future rate rise is as fanciful as it is unfair. To believe that basic communication with rural households is "softening up" the public requires either a very dim view of local democracy or a very generous view of the government's proposed rate-capping policy. Perhaps that is the real purpose of his letter.

Long before I became an elected member, I held a simple belief: rates and taxes are the price we pay for a functioning, civilised society. But that price should never push households into hardship. Too many in Ruapehu are already at breaking point — not because this Council has been reckless or extravagant, but because successive governments have refused to fund the national infrastructure they expect local communities to maintain.

Instead of confronting that long-standing failure, the current government has chosen the easier path: blame local authorities. Rate-capping is being marketed as a cure for supposed council excess, when the real issue is the structural underfunding of local government over decades. It is politically convenient to point the finger at councils; it is much harder to admit that Wellington has shifted responsibility for essential services onto rating bases that were never designed to carry them.

Rural districts like ours are being asked to do the impossible: maintain roads, water networks, and community infrastructure with no meaningful revenue tools beyond rates. Unlike many other councils, Ruapehu has no significant alternative income. Unless central government provides the supplementary funding that is standard across the OECD, rate-capping is nothing more than punching down, a slogan masquerading as policy.

Ruapehu is not a profligate authority. As a newly elected member, I have found staff to be prudent, disciplined, and deeply committed to maintaining levels of service under immense financial constraint. I understand the frustration households feel about rising rates. But writing to the Bulletin will not change the arithmetic. Without central government support, rates will continue to rise until capped with a drastic loss of services.

If Mr Harvey wishes to influence that reality, he might consider writing not to the Bulletin, but to his Member of Parliament, Suze Redmayne. That is where the real decisions lie.

John Chapman, RDC councillor

High cost water

• While I agree with Liz Brooker in her letter in last week's paper that the Government should be doing far more to support communities like ours, I do not agree with her version of events that led Ruapehu to be locked into a high-cost two-council water arrangement with Whanganui.

The reason Ruapehu now faces water bills significantly higher than necessary is simple. Councillors Neeson, Hoeta, Gram, Iwikau, Hadley-Chase, Wilson and Nottage voted to partner solely with Whanganui, rejecting a larger four- or five-council model that was clearly shown to be much cheaper.

The financial analysis presented to the previous council showed Ruapehu households could be paying around $1000 less under the larger model, along with substantially lower establishment costs for the water entity itself.

The involvement of Whanganui mayor Andrew Tripe and supposedly "independent" consultants (who are now employed to set the new Ruapehu/Whanganui model up), the misalignment with Te Awa Tupa and the mayoral ambitions of councillors Neeson and Hadley-Chase further clouded what should have been a straightforward affordability decision.

From an affordability perspective, the Whanganui–Ruapehu two-council water model is indefensible and mayor Kirton did an admirable job in attempting to get the then council to make a decision based on the evidence. Credit to those who continue to keep this issue firmly in the public eye.

Inland living doesn't stop underwater training

A group of Waimarino young divers train at a Rotorua pool, learning to scuba dive before heading out for open water dives. Photo: Ngāti Rangi.

Living well-inland in Aotearoa hasn't stopped a group of Waimarino students from Te Hoata and He Poutama Rangatahi learning to scuba dive, over the past few weeks.

The group has been attending an open water scuba diving course in Rotorua.

"Rangatahi (youth) learning to dive gain more than an adventurous skill, they build confidence and a strong connection to the ocean, rivers and lakes," says Ngāti Rangi, who organised the course.

"Diving enables them to gather kai safely and sustainably for their whānau, marae and community. Learning to dive strengthens cultural practices and food sovereignty. It also opens employment pathways in aquaculture, marine tourism, fisheries and environmental monitoring and research.

"Scuba training fosters understanding of underwater conservation, encourages kaitiakitanga and interest in marine biology and research science.

"Socially diving builds teamwork, trust, communication and resilience as safety depends on working together. Overall scuba diving supports cultural identity, career development, environmental stewardship and growth for the rangatahi.

"And best of all - they had great fun along the way."

Mangapurua Track reopens

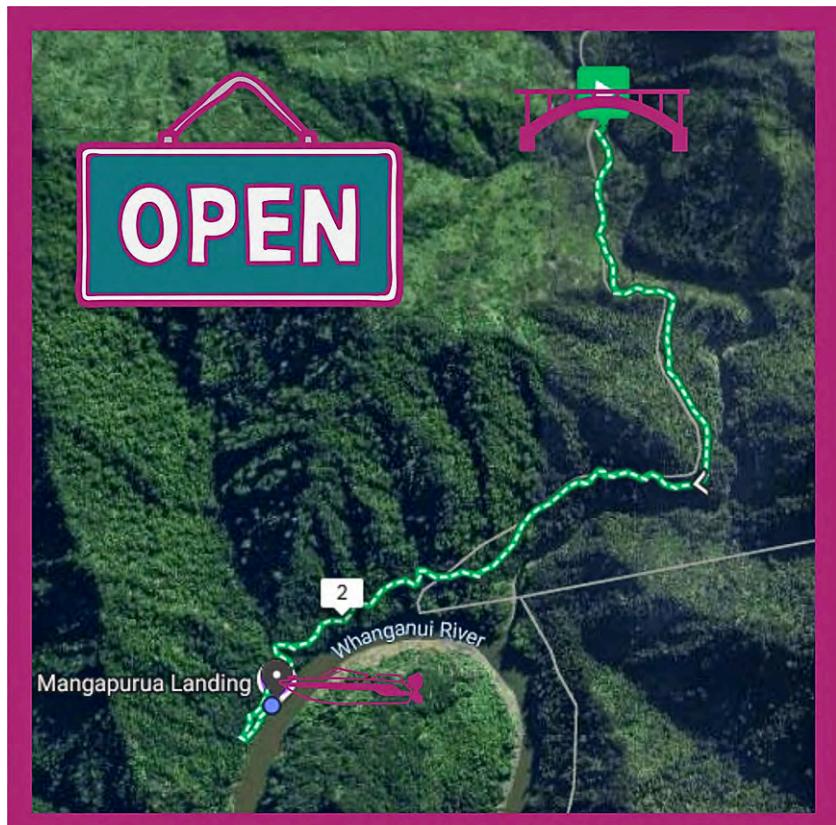

The Mangapurua Track has reopened and is passable, following an earlier slip that blocked access from Whanganui River to the Bridge to Nowhere.

"Following a slip on the bluff section between the Bridge to Nowhere and the Mangapurua Landing, assessments have been completed and follow-up safety actions and maintenance carried out," explained Mountains to Sea trail champion Lynley Twyman.

"A short section of the track is narrower than usual, so please take extra care. Orange mesh marks trail damage only (it is not a safety fence) and cyclists must dismount where signposted."

"Conditions can change — please always check our Trail Status page before you travel."

She said they are excited to welcome walkers and riders back through this special part of the trail.

Horizons celebrates establishment of field horsetail weevil

A plant pest widespread in the neighbouring Rangitikei District is also found in the Ruapehu District, but a new bug introduced by the regional council is starting to make a difference, says Craig Davey, Horizons environmental manager.

They have released the bug, field horsetail weevil, to help control the pest plant.

Horizons Regional Council recently inspected sites where field horsetail weevil had been released and are happy to find signs the weevil has established itself.

Davey says the establishment of these weevils is another positive step towards managing field horsetail in the region.

He said pest plants can easily move across districts but once they're established, can be difficult to remove.

"We identified they have survived the winter season by finding an adult weevil at the site alongside larvae within stems of field horsetail," says Davey.

"Using this weevil as a biocontrol agent is a first in the world for field horsetail."

"We are excited to have been part of the Rangitikei Horsetail Group's efforts to pave the way for managing field horsetail in Aotearoa New Zealand."

Davey says the pest is a threat to the agricultural sector.

"Field horsetail invades pasture, spoils bailage and stock won't graze it, it's a real nuisance."

"Field horsetail is a difficult pest plant to manage as methods such as removal or herbicide work for a short period of time."

Operator ignores Crossing warning

Almost 600 hikers ignored weather warnings for the Tongariro Alpine Crossing on Saturday. Photo: Facebook.

A tourism operator is alleged to have ignored weather warnings and transported several bus loads of hikers to the crossing, another operator has complained.

The operator posted on social media the reason why they cancelled their shuttles.

"We got our morning update showing excessive winds. This warranted DOC to place a hazardous weather warning," stated the shuttle operator.

"Unfortunately, one operator ignored this and transported a total of 13 full buses to the Tongariro Alpine Crossing.

"In addition many of those on the shuttle had dropped off several friends at the start."

They claimed that at 930am a total of 585 hikers were recorded.

"It started as a bright, calm day but the wind and cloud ... picked up.

"What is most concerning is how unprepared people are and that one operator exploited the other operators cancelling in clear breach of concession safety rules.

"Our manaaki rangers really did a good job of informing those determined to go and its really disappointing how rude some visitors were to those operators who cancelled.

"Our pledge is safety it's not about the money as some believe we care for your safety and enjoyment."

A tourist who booked for that day said he "did not mind at all that our trip was cancelled".

"I have a fair bit of experience of hill walking in the UK but not of conditions here so it is pleasing to see that some operators at least are prepared to advise and cancel accordingly.

"I would rather find a low-level walk than struggle in adverse weather and potentially become a rescue statistic."

Most replies to the post were supportive of the operator and were thankful that they had put safety first.

However, there were some who thought people should be free to make their own choices, while one said the weather reports were unreliable. But in reply, some also posted photos of the lenticular clouds capping Mt Ngauruhoe – a clear sign that bad weather including high winds is coming.

Business resetting for success

In Ohakune and Taumarunui, local businesses are the lifeblood of the community, says economic development manager Kim Treen, who has invited a group of organisations to set up a 'business reset' programme.

"From the mountain's peak to the main streets, your grit keeps the region beating. But being 'busy' shouldn't mean just running in circles. If you are working harder than ever but revenue isn't growing as expected, it is time for a strategic reset," says Treen.

She says the 90-day Business Reset programme is a "high-impact, one-day workshop designed specifically for established businesses ready to move from frustration to focus".

"This is a powerhouse collaboration with serious 'street cred,' bringing together Bizezi Ltd, Lisa's AI Cafe, Ruapehu District Council, Ngāti Rangi, CEDA, and the Regional Business Partner Network (RBPN).

"By combining the digital tools of the Bizezi App with the expertise of Lisa's AI Cafe, you will audit your business model and use human-guided AI to pinpoint exactly where to sharpen your focus.

"You won't just leave with ideas; you will walk away with a clear 90-day action plan and 2-3 immediate moves to lift your revenue.

"This is a rare opportunity to access top-tier strategy right here in the district."

The workshop costs $400 + GST, but for qualifying businesses, co-funding of up to 75% is available through the RBPN.

"Our communities thrive when our local businesses thrive. Give your business the momentum it deserves at Te Pae Tata (Ohakune) on 5 March or the Taumarunui RSA on 6 March."

Weevil saving pastures

"Herbicides aren't effective against field horsetail because they don't reach the full extent of the root system to properly kill the plant."

"Small root fragments can lead to a new population."

"Field horsetail is most commonly spread through contaminated gravel and by water (e.g. flooding)."

"It's so persistent and tricky to control, leading to loss of productivity and increased pasture management costs on farmland."

"The good news is the weevils should help us manage the plant."

Weevils bore into and feed inside the stem, which kills everything above them. The adults then lay eggs and the larvae once hatched eat down the stem through to the rhizomes (roots), which help to effectively kill the plant.

Spike in Taupō fishery offences prompts rules reminder

Fishing on the shore of Lake Taupō. Photo: DOC.

Department of Conservation (DOC) Taupō Fishery Rangers say they've seen a concerning rise in people breaking the rules when fishing for trout in the Taupō Fishing District during the peak summer period.

The spike in peak summer trout fishery offences amounts to four times what it was for the same period last summer.

"There has been a concerning increase in people breaking the rules, which can have serious consequences for the fishery," says Steve Doughty, compliance lead for DOC in the Taupō District.

"Anglers fishing without a valid licence was a common problem. Every angler must have a valid Taupō District fishing licence, which directly funds the ongoing management and protection of this special fishery."

DOC manages the Taupō Fishing District as a sustainable wild trout fishery, attracting thousands of anglers each year. Fishing regulations are in place to protect the future of the fishery, with a team of DOC Fishery Rangers patrolling the fishery to ensure everyone follows the rules while fishing local lakes and rivers.

Steve says the Taupō trout fishery is well-known globally and an entire section of the DOC website is dedicated to it – including information on the need for a valid licence, how to obtain one, and the fishery regulations.

"Other offences included using prohibited tackle, using more than one fishing rod per person, fishing within 200m of a marker pole at a stream or river mouth, as well as more technical licence-based offences such as non-family members fishing on family licences.

"These offences were often due to people not familiarising themselves with the regulations, being in a rush to get on the water and go netting through fishing, or just ignoring the regulations and hoping not to get caught.

"Those caught breaking the rules face formal warnings and fines of $400, and their fishing gear may also be seized," Steve Doughty says.

During the holiday peak of December 2022 and January 2023, a total of 21 Taupō fishery offences were detected. There was a reduction for the same period in 2023-2024, with half that number of offences. But this season (summer 2025-2026) Fishery Rangers dealt with 40 offences – nearly four times the same period prior.

"The fishery is regulated for good reason," says Steve. "DOC staff urge people to make sure they have a valid Taupō District fishing licence before they start fishing. Importantly, anglers should read and understand the fishing regulations.

"That way they can enjoy their fishing, secure in the knowledge they are supporting this magnificent wild trout fishery."

WATER SERVICES MANAGER

About the role

As Water Services Manager, you will lead the delivery of drinking water, wastewater and stormwater services across the Ruapehu District. This role is responsible for ensuring safe, reliable and compliant water services that support the health, wellbeing and resilience of our communities.

You will oversee day-to-day operations delivered through contractors, guide asset management and capital and renewals planning, and ensure compliance with regulatory and legislative requirements. Working closely with staff, contractors, iwi partners, elected members and the wider community, you will provide clear leadership and communication, particularly during incidents, outages or periods of change.

This role also plays an important part in supporting Council through ongoing water services reform, helping to maintain strong systems, accurate asset information and continuity of service.

You'll bring a practical understanding of operational service delivery, asset management and contractor oversight, along with the ability to balance long-term planning with day-to-day decision-making.

You will also bring:

- Leadership experience in infrastructure or essential services

- Sound judgement and confidence responding to operational issues and incidents
- Strong communication, relationship-building and problem-solving skills

A relevant tertiary qualification (or equivalent experience) and a full current NZ driver licence are required.

Year of impact for rescue chopper

The Greenlea Rescue Helicopter has once again proven to be a vital lifeline for communities across the Central Plateau and Lakes region, says Olivia Martinovich, the Trust's communications co-ordinator.

In 2025, the Greenlea Rescue Helicopter crew carried out 519 missions, responding to emergencies ranging from serious medical events and accidents to search and rescue operations in remote and challenging environments.

"Behind every mission is the generosity of donors, sponsors, and supporters who make it possible for the Greenlea Rescue Helicopter to take off at a moment's notice," says Martinovich.

"Thanks to the community's support, the rescue crew of highly skilled pilots, air crew officers, and critical care flight paramedics were able to deliver urgent medical care to patients when every minute mattered."

A year of impact

- 519 missions completed in total in 2025
- 34 patients transported to hospital for urgent care
- 21 patients transported following motor vehicle accidents
- 114 rural, remote, or search and rescue operations completed

- 271 inter-hospital transfers undertaken
- 79 miscellaneous missions carried out.

"Behind every statistic is a person in need – this overview highlights a few of the missions the Greenlea Rescue Helicopter crew flew throughout 2025," says Martinovich.

On 18 January the Helicopter was dispatched to Mount Tauhara for a male who was critically injured during a fall. The patient was airlifted to Taupo Hospital for further medical treatment.

On 28 March the Helicopter was tasked to Tongariro National Park for a male who was experiencing a serious medical event. The patient was stabilised for approximately 1 hour and 40 minutes before being flown to Rotorua Hospital for further treatment. The rescue helicopter returned to the area a few days later for a female who was experiencing a serious medical event on the Tongariro Crossing. The patient was treated on scene by onboard paramedic for approximately an hour before being transported in a stable condition to Taupo Hospital for further medical care.

On 10 May the Helicopter was dispatched to the Kaimanawa Forest for a male who had sustained serious injuries following a fall. The patient was winched from the remote location and transported to Taupo Hospital for further treatment.
