

BISBEE HISTORY

At the turn of the 19th century, thanks to a booming copper mine, Bisbee was the largest city between St. Louis and San Francisco, as well as one of the most cosmopolitan, boasting many modern and cultural amenities; the state's first community library, stock exchange, and a baseball stadium argued to pre-date Chicago's Wrigley Field. But like any mining town, Bisbee also had its rough edges. It was home to the notorious Brewery Gulch, packed with dozens of saloons and brothels.

BISBEE RENAISSANCE

As copper mining declined elsewhere in the 1930s and 1940s, the Copper Queen remained in operation throughout the mid century using the open-pit mining process and was one of the most prolific copper mines of its time. But with decreasing returns, it too eventually closed. The official closure of the mines in the 1970s ushered in a cultural renaissance for the town of Bisbee. As mining families left, artists and creatives were drawn to the inexpensive and historic downtown spaces that time seemed to have forgotten. Today, Bisbee is an eclectic artists' haven teeming with shops, galleries, restaurants, and nightlife. A Southwestern hub for arts and culture, our sky island retains a rich history that is just as much cosmopolitan as it is wild west.

OUR HISTORY

Originally called the Brooks Apartments, our historic building was constructed in 1914, by local businessman, James L Brooks, for a cost of $20k.

Built in the Territorial style, the Brooks Apartment house was quite modern for its time. An early example of a multi-family dwelling, newspapers touted it as "one of the finest buildings of its kind in the country". It was home to "respectable society" who reveled in the spacious verandas, private entrances, concrete floors, and large partitions that distinguished it from the boarding houses of the day. Many newlyweds and families, even the famous Los Angeles psychic to the stars, Madame Martel, called the Brooks Apartments home in the early part of the 20th century.

Like many of the buildings in Bisbee, the Brooks Apartments fell into disrepair over the years. In 2006, it was remodeled and reimagined as the Eldorado Suites Hotel, and in 2015 the mother daughter duo of Lisa & Searra Head took stewardship of the historic property.
