Problem

What challenges did you face before you bought mute-labs?

The teams at Warner Bros. make numerous phone calls every day – from customer service to internal coordination to working with external partners. In an open office, however, this quickly led to high noise levels: multiple calls happening at once, background noise, and almost no private spaces. This was exhausting not only for the employees making the calls, but also for their colleagues trying to concentrate. The constant distractions reduced productivity and even created stress in everyday work. It was clear: a solution was needed that would allow confidential and focused conversations without disturbing the entire office – and that’s exactly where mute-labs provided the answer.

Our mute-labs booths are used with great pleasure every day. They bring more peace to the office floors, as phone calls now take place inside the booths instead of in open areas. We also really appreciated that the installation service from mute-labs was carried out very carefully and seamlessly.

How did mute-labs help to solve these problems?

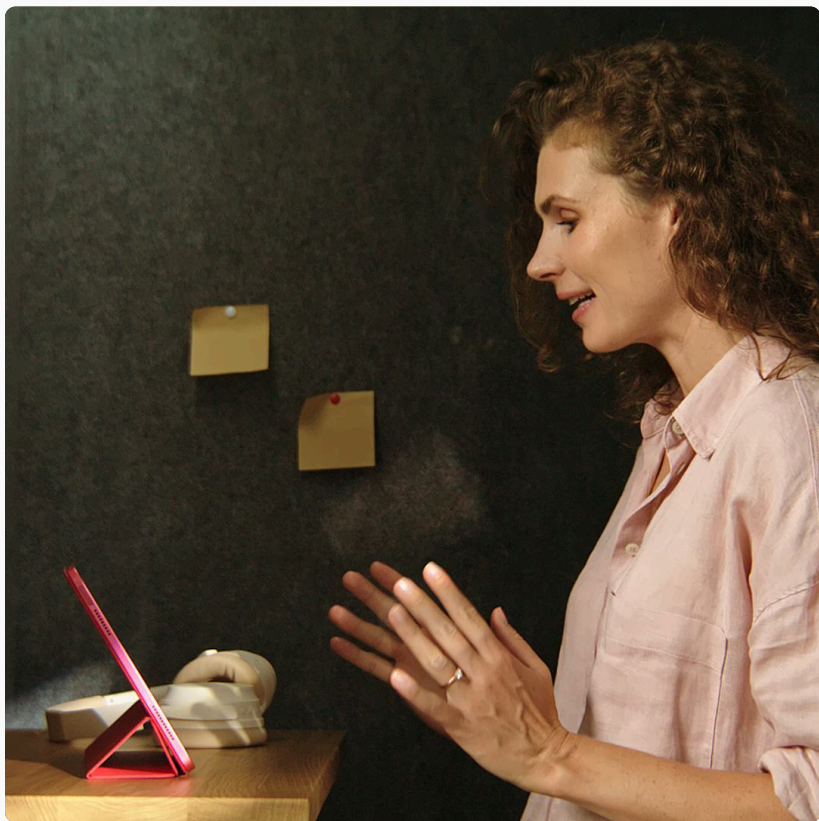

Thanks to the mute-labs phone booths, employees can now make calls without being disturbed and without disturbing their colleagues. The booths provide not only acoustic shielding but also a retreat for confidential conversations or focused work. This has created a much calmer and more productive atmosphere in the open office. Distractions from simultaneous conversations have noticeably decreased, and teams can complete their tasks more efficiently. Customers and partners also benefit, since calls now take place in a more professional and undisturbed environment. Overall, the introduction of mute-labs booths has significantly improved the work environment and general employee satisfaction.
