With Horizon, BSH was able to:

Acquire real-life behavioural purchase-intent data at scale

Consumer-validate a strategic pricing decision in only 4 weeks

Execute a successful launch for a market innovation

Europe's leading home appliance company, BSH, was eager to launch a sustainable market innovation. The prospect: a microfibre filter device for washing machines.

The challenges:

- Is there a market for this product?
- What is the consumers' price sweet spot for this market novelty w/o any historical data on price acceptance?

This is where Horizon came into place to consumer-validate the market demand and support the price decision with behavioural data, pre-market introduction.

BSH faced the challenge of finding the optimal price point for a market novelty

They needed to understand the consumers' willingness-to-pay and their price sensitivity

Behavioural research with Horizon helped identify the optimal price point to maximise demand and revenue — prior to launch

With Horizon, we are able to de-risk significant investments, understand the demand for real market innovations, and shape the offerings pre-launch.

By leveraging Horizon's real market consumer validation, BSH was able to understand the impact of different pricing strategies on market demand — prior to the product launch.

This consumer validation engaged over 6,989 consumers, revealing a significant demand drop at €249 and identifying €199 as the most profitable price point.

This strategic insight enabled them to introduce the product at the optimal price point, maximising both demand and revenue while ensuring a successful market entry.

Thanks to purchase intent validation from Horizon, BSH was able to uncover the price optimum for releasing their microfibre filter device for washing machines to the market
