The Ties That Bind Us

Fresh from the green and verdant piney woods of east Texas, and the beautiful Goolsby's Pool where they have their cabin, Lynn Adler and Lindy Hearne have raised a new crop of songs to send out to the world. From their Spring Hollow Organic Song Farm, singer-songwriters Lynn Adler and Lindy Hearne have been connecting with audiences from coast to coast for twenty years. Their music is a signature blend of original folk, jazz, and blues with deep Texas roots. Their repertoire is playful, poignant, and poetic including sparky love ballads, historically based tributes, quirky story songs and anthems of justice and peace.

These songs are lovingly crafted and beautifully played, and full of the warmth and heart that anyone who meets Lynn and Lindy immediately feels. The journey starts with "The Ties That Bind Us" a mid-tempo ballad of memories and connection to home followed by "Sweet Texas Songs" a soaring homage to nature and mystery of stories and music that spring from water, wind and legends of the duo's East Texas piney woods home. Then we move into "Let's Do It" a breezy love song about taking a chance on love. We get a classic folk song vibe with "Come Harvest Time" (featuring Bill Hearne) then a tender bluegrass ballad laced with treasured hymn lines and titles with "Standin' Next To Mama." Then travel west with "River of Wind" where the song roves and rambles, and "Snakeskin" a slithering, spaghetti Western of a song. "Just When I Got To Know You" honors the memory of a dear friend who has moved on, and "Heart Of The Country" tells of folk legends. Commenting on the world "I've Been Here Before" is a dreamy floating ode to throwing caution to the wind, jumping into your boat and pushing off from the shore. "It's Summer And We're Burning" is a wildfire cautionary tale about our planet (environmentally speaking; politically too). The "Long Slow Drive" features Eliza Gilkyson on vocals in a bare bones song about giving yourself some grace while grieving takes its time. We close with the meditative "Wayfaring Stranger" and the reassuring lift of "O Angels Are Coming."

Says producer Don Richmond, "One of the highest compliments I can say about good music and good art, is that it makes you feel glad to be alive. These songs remind me of the glory and goodness in the world, and the wonder and mystery of it all."

"Since a young age I was exposed to Lynn and Lindy's music, and attended a songwriter's workshop they hosted where I learned some great songwriting techniques.

They are salt of the earth people with many years of songwriting experience and great harmonies"

- Kacey Musgraves
