Nature and Precision

For the first time in Copenhagen, eggersmann presents the SKYWALK design. As part of the curated exhibition DESIGN / DIALOGUE, the sculptural kitchen island initiates a sensual dialogue between authentic quartzite and hot-rolled stainless steel. At the intersection of nature and precision, eggersmann elevates the deliberate use of materials in kitchen architecture to a new level.

Deep blue tones, pebble-like inlays and striking veins—often bluish, olive, or rust-colored—characterize Blue Ocean quartzite—not designed, but natural. Shaped by tectonic movements, temperature, pressure, wind, and water. Its unique structure and coloring were formed over millions of years, resulting in a material with a distinctive character.

In context of the SKYWALK design, the island element made of natural stone appears to float, visually attached in a diagonal shift to a supporting element, consistently manufactured from stainless steel.

The industrial functionalism of hot-rolled and brushed stainless steel — first engineered for shipbuilding — surprises with its warm feel and deep, fabric-like texture. This light, shimmering material, still rarely used in kitchens, is meticulously hand-polished, lending warmth and vibrancy to the cool steel.

DESIGN / DIALOGUE

As a platform for contemporary design and interdisciplinary exchange, DESIGN / DIALOGUE brings together international brands, designers, and creative voices in a curated exhibition as part of 3daysofdesign. This year's edition at the Copenhagen art institution Den Frie Udstillingsbygning offers a multi-layered exploration of current design perspectives in an avant-garde atmosphere that can be experienced spatially.

As part of the exhibition, eggersmann presents kitchen design as a sensitive dialogue between people, space, and materials—an expression of the here and now and an invitation to consciously experience the moment.

Sophisticated since 1908

Every detail counts and has a great impact on the overall appearance of an eggersmann: every joint, every miter, every screw. With this obsession for detail, eggersmann creates distinctive one-of-a-kind kitchens.

Since 1908, the company represents both reliability and the mindset of the people behind the brand. With expertise and experience, attention to detail, and craftsmanship, exceptional systems have been developed ever since.

It's not about perfection, it's about authenticity and dedication, about genuineness and honesty.

We listen, we look, we think ahead. Out of conviction and consistency, not just as a matter of principle. Now in the fifth generation of the Eggersmann family.
