

TIMELINES

Some loves are bigger than lifetimes.

Prominent Boston millionaire James Aldair is afraid of crowds. He's been afraid of crowds since he was a baby, as well as germs, flying, drowning, and heights. With a front row seat to the biggest game of the year, all eyes are on him - but he'd rather be anywhere else. When a familiar looking stranger comes too close to learning his secrets, James heads into the hallway before he can lose his cool. But when he bumps into someone willing to help, it's not just the crowds that shock him.

Super Bowl waitress Anna Cunningham wears her heart on her sleeve. Even though she had to drop out of college, she's still a nurse at heart...and when she sees someone in trouble, she can't stop herself from lending a hand. She's sure she'll never see him again, but fate has a way of making worlds collide – and Anna isn't sure she's capable of handling the mysterious, impassive James Aldair, who life is power and money and closed doors, especially since she has demons of her own.

When James seeks out help for his fears from past-life therapist Brian Beckett, he travels back in time to the lifetimes he shared with Anna, with his family, and with business rival Warren Banks – whose grudge in this lifetime seems premeditated. When James finds out why, he must race to stop history from repeating itself – or risk losing Anna, his job, and his life. Some loves are bigger than lifetimes. And all debts must be repaid.
