Where Did My Mulch Go?

It's not your imagination—mulch really does “disappear” over the winter, just not in the way it seems. Much of it naturally breaks down, with organic mulch decomposing over time and enriching your soil in the process. Weather also plays a big role. Wind, rain, melting snow, and freeze-thaw cycles can shift and thin out your mulch layer. A fresh top-up isn't just about looks—it helps restore that protective barrier for moisture retention, weed control, and overall garden health.
