Marita's family and friends

She learned early that life does not always move gently, and she learned, too,
that you keep going anyway.

She carried loss without bitterness,
work without complaint,
and love without condition.
When the road was heavy,
she walked it.

When it was too much,
she stood still, gathered herself,
and went on again.

Strength lived in her not as hardness, but as resilience -
the kind that bends, adapts, and quietly endures.

She had the courage to build a life piece by piece,
to stand on her own feet,
to say, this is enough, and I am enough.

And through it all,
love ran like a steady thread
for her children,
her grandchildren and great-grandchildren
her family,
her people.

This is the life we honour.
This is the courage we remember.
This is the love that remains.
