Trevor's Family & Friends

Trevor once compared life to a fine old watch.
It keeps ticking.

Its movements continue to work as well as they can.

And eventually, one day, the mechanism stops.

Today, Trevor's watch has stopped.

But what a remarkable amount of living there was between that first tick and the last.

He worked hard.

He played hard.

He served his community.

He loved his family.

He remained curious.

He learned.

He travelled.

He competed.

He provided.

And he never seemed particularly interested in making a fuss about any of it.

He simply got on with it.

And perhaps the words he used towards the end of his life
are the most fitting words we could remember today:

"I've had a great life."
