Harvest Memories

In golden fields at break of day,
you toiled beneath the sun's warm ray.
Through every season, come what may,
your love of land would never stray.

With calloused hands and steadfast stride,
you worked the land with love and pride.
Through storm and sun, through harsh and still,
a farmer's duty to fulfill.

Now gentle winds through wheat fields sigh,
soft echoes of your labour lie.
Yet in the earth you'll never die,
your harvest lives beneath the sky.
Though seasons change and times move on,
your spirit lingers in the dawn.
