Two lives of service honored with memorial benches

Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes dedicate permanent memorials to the late Lt. Gov. Gib Miles and Clara Bushyhead

Editor-in-Chief

CONCHO, Okla. — Two lives dedicated to service, family and the Cheyenne and Arapaho people were remembered Sept. 9 as the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes dedicated permanent memorial benches honoring the late Lt. Gov. Gib Miles and the late Clara Bushyhead.

The two granite benches, each perfectly etched with a photograph and personal inscription, sit beneath shade trees in front of the Dept. of Administration building in Concho, Okla.

The bench honoring Miles features his photograph, name, date of birth, Nov. 24, 1955, date of death, Sept. 4, 2023, and the inscription:

“Honoring a life deeply rooted in tradition and love.”

Bushyhead’s bench features her photograph, name, date of birth, July 3, 1964, date of death, Jan. 5, 2022, and the inscription:

“A lifetime of service for our people.”

The dedication brought together tribal leaders, family members, friends and colleagues who shared memories of two people whose lives touched generations of

Cheyenne and Arapaho citizens.

Cheyenne Chief Gordon Yellowman opened the ceremony with an invocation and prayer, followed by a Memorial Song performed by Emmitt Red Bird’s drum group.

Cheyenne and Arapaho Gov. Reggie Wassana welcomed guests and family members and reflected on

CACDC helps empower tribal citizens through financial literacy

Kimberly Burk, Tribal Tribune Correspondent

As with much of the population at large, citizens of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes can benefit from financial literacy training, says Chris Coburn, chief executive officer of the CACDC.

People who undergo training such as that offered by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Community Development Corporation “have more ability to succeed as a business, as a family and as a household,” said Coburn, who has led the CACDC since March.

“It’s really fundamental for people to understand financial literacy,” said Coburn, who is Cherokee and Muscogee.

“It’s not a question of intelligence, it’s a question of looking at things in a different way,” Coburn said. “Many people aren’t taught how to plan, how to budget.”

In conjunction with Tinker Federal Credit Union, the tribes offered in August a two-day financial literacy workshop. Coburn said CACDC is required to offer such training because it is a Community Development Financial Institution.

“If we lend money to people, we must offer skills-based assistance,” Coburn said.

Participants in the August workshop ranged from a young couple in their 20s to people nearing retirement, Coburn said. One of the training goals was to help tribal citizens become more confident about their ability to manage money.

“If someone is not confident or they are in a victim mindset, they can’t fight for their future or their families,” said Coburn, who held similar roles with the Osage Nation and the Mvskoke Fund before joining the CACDC, which is based at the Tribal Service Center in Oklahoma City.

Coburn said he partnered with Tinker Federal Credit Union because it uniquely has an entire team focused on financial literacy. He said the training was very pragmatic.

“It’s taking something difficult to grasp and putting it in common language,” he said.

“How to manage your household money and how to manage credit is a hard subject. Money is necessary. We

Protest follows massive water leak at El Reno bitcoin site

Glen Miller, El Reno Tribune

Sarah Pedro stood on the side of South Country Club Road, her face dripping with sweat from the 103-degree heat, but her hands gripped tightly to a sign reading “No to Data Centers.”

“This is my conviction so I can stand a little heat,” said Pedro.

The El Reno woman is part of two Native American groups protesting data centers statewide, the latest being the Bitcoin mining business located on West Jensen Road.

Though Bitcoin mining centers and data centers are both forms of digital infrastructure, they differ in operational demands, environmental requirements and purpose.

Pedro said she and others will be protesting throughout the week due to the fallout from the exposed Bitcoin mining center in El Reno.

“Let’s face it, it’s a mobile data center and I’m against it. I don’t just want it to be shut down, but remove the whole thing. It’s a fire risk, it’s noise pollution and it’s a health risk when you think about it,” said Pedro.

The Bitcoin facility, located at 801 West Jensen Road, came into the spotlight last week when it was discovered a privately-owned and installed fire hydrant and waterline onsite malfunctioned, spilling 3.8 million gallons of water.

The leak led to the water in the West Tower at Lake

Cheyenne and Arapaho educator leads new Native American studies curriculum at Clinton Public Schools

Latoya Lonelodge
Senior Reporter

CLINTON, Okla. - Leading the classrooms in Indigenous histories, cultures and traditions of North America, Cheyenne and Arapaho citizen Ahk-ta-na-hi Goodblanket.

Goodblanket is the newly assigned teacher for Native American Studies curriculum, a new elective and class offered to students for the first time at Clinton Public Schools.

As a former 2017 graduate of Clinton High School, Goodblanket was born and raised in the Clinton, Okla., community. Goodblanket was raised in the modern world, but was also raised around his traditions, which included the Sundance, Native American Church, sweats, powwows and he participated in gourd dances throughout his life, as well as singing at the drum here and there.

As a recent graduate from Fort Lewis College in Durango, Colo., Goodblanket has a degree in Native American Studies and Environmental Studies. As someone who always wanted to help and be of service, Goodblanket never thought he would become a teacher.

“When this job opportunity opened up, I knew it sounded just right for me and it was a perfect fit because I went to school for Native American studies and environmental studies,” Goodblanket said.

Goodblanket also studied psychology while in school, which gave him more of an understanding of children and Indigenous psychology, growth and development and how to care for young adults and adolescents, understanding and paralleling that with Indigenous understanding and giving them space to grow.

When he saw the opportunity for the position as the new Native American Studies teacher, he was hesitant in applying at first and thought it may be far fetched and over his head, too much for him to take on.

“I didn’t necessarily have it on my scope, but I understood when going to college and seeing professors teach, I felt that I could also do that as well, I felt sometimes they

The verdict: Clinton High School Mock Trial Team heads to Empire Mock Trial Competition in Philadelphia

Latoya Lonelodge, Senior Reporter

The future of law is here as Clinton High School Mock Trial Team heads to Pennsylvania as one of 36 schools to attend the Empire Mock Trial competitions.

Empire is an international non-profit organization hosting mock trial competitions for high school students. Hungry for a big win, the Clinton High School Mock Trial Team prepares to compete against the nation’s best as they suit up and put their minds to work in the legal profession.

Held in Philadelphia from Oct. 15-19, the Clinton High School Mock Trial Team will be traveling to the Empire Mock Trial to compete against other high school teams in the very place where the Declaration of Independence was adopted.

Founded in 2007, Empire is dedicated to educating, connecting and empowering high school students to be more compassionate and capable citizens.

According to the Empire Mock Trial website, the organization has served more than 15,000 students from 38 states and seven countries, instilling values such as civil discourse, respectful advocacy, and a commitment to the rule of law.

Getting the opportunity to compete on a larger scale, for many on the mock trial team, competing at Empire is a stepping stone into their future careers as many hope to someday enter the legal profession.

In her third year on the team as a junior in high school, Alexandra Fuentes, 16, initially joined the team as she believed joining would benefit her as her interests included entering the law field.

“What interests me the most is learning how to hold yourself in trial with the process in holding a trial and my teammates, just being around them really helps a lot and it’s really enjoyable just being around these people,” Fuentes said.

Fuentes hopes to attend the University of Oklahoma School of Law and participate on their mock trial team, as she’s formed a passion for it and learned many skills from being on the team.

“I learned how to sort of gage where I need to, like my focus, I learned how to work with people, how to lead a room and get people to pay attention to you and listen to the things that you’re saying,” Fuentes said.

Ace Elizondo, 17, a senior, first took interest in the class his freshman year of high school with influence from his siblings as they also took part in the mock trial team. Elizondo said since the first week of being in the class his freshman year, he knew it was a place for him.

“The team itself, we’re all good friends. We connect in a way that truthfully I haven’t been able to connect with in other groups or clubs I’ve been in, it’s a very strong relationship wise team, we’re very close and I love that about this class,” Elizondo said.

What Elizondo has learned the most from the mock trial team is leadership skills, how to be a leader and how to take charge when things need to be done, public speaking and controlling his emotions, as he’s had trouble with that before.

The Clinton High School Mock Trial Team is heading to the Empire Mock Trial competition in Philadelphia, one of 36 schools chosen to compete. The team is the only high school representing Oklahoma.

“I hope to take what I learn from this class and use it for the future because I want to become a teacher and this class has taught me great leadership skills, how to speak for myself, stand up for myself, as well as stand up for others when they need it,” Elizondo said.

Growing a strong bond with the team since her freshman year,

Victoria Nemtan, 16, a junior, felt like the team are her closest friends and what she enjoys most about the mock trial team is being able to speak in front of people and being able to experience new things.

“I’ve developed a very big passion in law and arguing so I do hope to become a lawyer and go to law school and use this jump start to my career,” Nemtan said.

Looking forward to attending the Empire Mock Trial, Nemtan believes it will be much harder than the state competitions held in Oklahoma.

“I’m looking to challenge myself and to challenge the team in total, but I’m also looking to having a good time and have some fun and improve my skills,” Nemtan said.

Ashley Garcia Morales, 16, joined the team with inspiration from one of the captains during her eighth-grade year. She said she knew she wanted to be a lawyer since the sixth grade.

“I hope to use my knowledge that I have now and go to law school and become a lawyer. What’s helped me the most in this class that I learned is public speaking, I am not great with talking out in front of a class and this class helped me a lot with it,” Garcia Morales said.

Enjoying the friendships she’s made while being on the mock trial team and the bonds she’s created, Garcia Morales looks forward to attending Empire and its opportunities.

“I look forward to actually seeing more competition outside the state of Oklahoma and what other teams bring to the table and just the fun of it,” Garcia Morales said.

Enjoying the winning aspect of the mock trial team, Felipe Acosta Sandoval, 16, looks forward to attending Empire and said it’s an honor that the team is going.

“There’s this thing at Empire trial called the excellent witness and that’s ranked and I really want to be ranked first, that’s primarily what I want, to be better than all the other witnesses,” Acosta Sandoval said.

While he believes he won’t be using much of the legal team knowledge in the future, Acosta Sandoval will take his public speaking skills to benefit his future.

“To be able to talk confidently, somewhere in the future, to be able to talk substantially,” Acosta Sandoval said.

Enjoying the people she met through mock trial, Whitney Salazar, 15, first joined the team as the quiet kid, but said the team has really brought her spirit out more and has opened her up.

“They’ve grown to be my closest friends, like my family almost,” Salazar said.

Salazar won’t be attending the Empire trip, however she looks forward to watching them shine and hearing all about their experience.

Being on the team, Salazar felt she’s gained a voice and would benefit her in the future.

“I was quiet but from being on this team, I kind of gained my voice more and so I feel like that would really help me out, and I feel like that would really help me out in the future,” Salazar said.

Cheyenne and Arapaho Youth, Kira Rhoads, 14, took interest in the mock trial team last year in her eighth grade year when they visited her school and talked about the team.

“They started talking about how fun it is, how witnesses are, how attorneys are, how they go to competitions, so that really interested me, because I always had a thought to be a lawyer,” Rhoads said.

Since joining the team, Rhoads has enjoyed being a part of the team and is looking forward to seeing what she can do and what she can get better at while at Empire.

“I enjoy this team a lot, they brought my confidence out, we became really close really fast, which made me really happy,” Rhoads said.

Rhoads hopes to take her knowledge from the mock trial team with her to law school and become a lawyer someday. From being on the team, she’s learned to speak more confidently and believes that will help her in the future.

“This team is really great and they make you feel like they’re there for you and they all have your back and if people want to give it a chance, give it a chance,” Rhoads said.

Interested in law, Joshua Armstrong, 15, joined the team his freshman year and has enjoyed the learning experience.

“I hope what I learn helps me gain more confidence and get into law school,” Armstrong said.

Jaxon Black, 14, became first interested in the mock trial team his eighth-grade year and what he enjoys the most about the team is being able to come together and practice and work in the same areas. Black hopes to utilize his knowledge from the mock trial team to pursue a career as a lawyer in the future.

“What I look forward to the most is this to be a learning experience and a team bonding experience, I really think this would help us all get closer as a team and be an excellent learning experience,” Black said.

didn’t get to choose the rules, but we can choose what happens.”

Coburn said one of the workshop courses was about “the psychology of money.”

Attitudes about money can be cultural or based on the family environment, he said.

“Emotion overrides a logical decision a lot of times,” Coburn said. “Everyone has to find their own right answers for their family, their household. These classes are new ways of looking at things and best practices.”

About 35 people attended financial literacy training offered this year in Concho and in Oklahoma City, Coburn said. He said learning together is important, as the workshops “are about creating a culture of community around helping each other find the best ways to move forward.”

A more in-depth course will probably be offered in October, Coburn said.

In addition to financial education, CACDC offers access to capital, business development services, commercial loans and community development initiatives.

CACDC distinguishes itself from traditional banking institutions through unique strategies, according to its website.

“First, it applies a more flexible approach to credit analysis, often reducing the upfront capital required from business proprietors. It also offers the possibility of a longer amortization period, enabling more tailored repayment schedules,” the website states.

CACDC offers loans starting as low as $5,000. On the upper end, CACDC can independently provide loan financing up to $300,000. For credit requests beyond this figure, CACDC can aid in the process, although it will require partnerships with other financial entities, according to its website.

Bitcoin mining center operating illegally in El Reno, Okla., was brought to light by a damaged fire hydrant on the property that ended up leaking over 3.8 million gallons of water.

BITCOIN MINING SITE

El Reno dropping to 10 feet and forcing the city to put a ban on all outside watering. El Reno Public Schools and Redlands Community College shut down for two days.

Water service to businesses and residents south of Interstate 40 and west of U.S. 81 was suspended until the leak was found. It was discovered by members of the El Reno Public Works Department and Fire Chief Jason Duff on the morning of Aug. 27 on a tip by a local resident living in the area.

“On the south end of the property was the private fire hydrant on a private waterline. A lot of people think, well, if it’s a fire hydrant, it belongs to the fire department. That was not the case here,” said El Reno Mayor Steve Jensen.

Jensen raises cattle on land off Jensen Road and the Heaston area, both of which were shut off from city water service. He spent more than $25,000 out of pocket to purchase portable water containers and get water from outside sources in order to hand-water his herds.

“We wanted to free up the water and pressure for the residents of El Reno,” said Jensen.

He said locating the leak was not easy due to tall grass, weeds and plants around the hydrant and waterline.

“It’s an I-2 industrial site that is supposed to be mowed, but the sunflowers and grass were so tall and it was up there close to where their Bitcoin mining operation is. It’s hard to detect because it was 100 yards off the road,” said Jensen.

The mayor and Interim City Manager Ken Brown said drought conditions also led to the delay in the leak detection.

“People say, well, 3.8

million gallons of water, you ought to be able to see it. We’re in such a major drought right now and the water can flow out but there’s so many big cracks in the ground, it takes time for those to fill up and the water run out into the creek. The water ran close to a mile down through there,” said Jensen.

Who is going to pay the bill?

The 3.8 million gallons lost is roughly one day of normal water usage for the entire city of El Reno and the customers it serves. El Reno provides water to the Heaston area and the town of Union City, among others.

Public Information Manager Lyndsay Bayne said the city uses between 3 and 4 million gallons of water daily “depending on the weather.”

The Jensen Road property is owned by Athlon Blockchain Technologies LLC. The company and founder, Tony Shi are based in Palo Alto, Calif. The company kept an El Reno address, listed on its website, in the 2400 block of South Choctaw – which is a residential dwelling.

Jensen said Athlon will be responsible for the water bill as well as additional expenses incurred by the city.

He added El Reno Public Schools provided manpower, drones and search equipment and he urged the district to compile cost figures to be added to the Athlon bill.

“The water was all metered so we will bill the property owner for the water and there will be no cost to the taxpayers of El Reno. We’re going to bill them for additional overtime that our employees had and all expenses associated with the search trying to find the leak because it was not a failure in the city of El Reno system,” said Jensen.

The city placed an emergency 10-day abatement on the property for various fire and safety code violations, among others. The site was also condemned for public nuisance due to the water leak and the subsequent fallout.

An abatement hearing is set for Sept. 14.

Brown said city staff has been in contact with the property owner.

“We’ve notified them of the violations,” said Brown.

Brown added the situation may not be resolved in the hearing, especially if the owners do not show up.

“If that happens, traditionally we give them an extra 30 days to appear. Then we can take additional steps to start the abatement process,” said Brown.

Two large box trucks were seen on the site Wednesday but Brown said he was not worried about Athlon skipping out on the fines.

“As far as collecting the money, they (Athlon) are the owner of record on the land so they’re not leasing it from someone else,” said Brown.

Will there be criminal charges?

Brown, who served as El Reno’s police chief before being named interim city manager, doesn’t think the operation warrants any criminal charges nor does he think any state or federal agencies will get involved.

“It was a legitimate business so I don’t believe there was anything criminal. It’s going to be on the civil side, meaning that it covered code violations and things like that,” said Brown.

It always been a Bitcoin mining site

Since the city issued the abatement notice and shut off water service to the Bitcoin mining site, the noise level has dropped.

The El Reno City Council voted in January 2019 to rezone a large area along Jensen Road, like other areas in the city, from an Agriculture status (A-1) to Industrial (I-2), according to Matt White.

White sat on the council at that time as mayor alongside Councilwoman Tracey Rider, who now serves as Canadian County commissioner for District 3.

Both recall that 2019 vote, with Rider saying she voted against rezoning, feeling such industrial use was getting “too close to residential areas.”

White and Rider said they were shocked to find out a Bitcoin mining business eventually landed in that area.

According to a property search on the Canadian County website, the 801 Jensen Road property, covering 28.52 acres, was sold by a local family’s revocable trust on October 8, 2021, to an unnamed buyer for $641,500.

In a press release sent out by the city last week, Brown stated Athlon applied for a Commercial Building Permit through the city’s Community Development Department, the same month as the property’s sale, and paid all the normal processing fees.

The business type listed on the initial application fit into the scope of the area’s zoning so the application was eventually approved and permits issued.

“The way I understand, it was for computer operations, and by right, they can do what they were doing,” said Jensen.

Brown agreed.

“It was zoned for that Bitcoin mining use and that’s how it was kind of portrayed. It was zoned to be able to do that,” said Brown.

According to the Property Record Card on the Canadian County Assessor’s Office web page, the Jensen Road property has nine mobile mining containers worth $266,285, one commercial building and a paved road. It does not list the shipping containers currently onsite.

The property’s current market value is $1,076,484.

The press release further said Athlon was issued a stop work order in June 2023, which was supposed to suspend all construction at the site due to multiple fire and life safety code violations. The original building and electrical permits had also expired.

“We did some inspections and they didn’t pass inspections and so we went back and forth several times with many of the violations being fire-related,” said Brown.

Athlon was given until December 2023 to obtain new permits, said the release, and told that operations at the site were suspended until it got a Certificate of Occupancy.

Those documents, said Brown, were never issued.

So why was the Bitcoin site up and running?

Jensen and Brown agreed several factors such as staff turnover and workplace communication led to the Athlon-owned site flying under the city’s radar for 32 months between the issuance of the stop order and the water leak.

“I drive by there practically every day. It’s hard to tell if it’s running or not. I mean the gates are always closed and there’s nobody coming in or out.

“Every once in awhile you’ll see a guy or two walking around but I didn’t know if they were maintenance or not – but nothing comes or goes,” said Jensen.

A water bill was paid every month, according to Bayne, but there was no high usage total in the time prior to the leak that raise a red flag.

“A lot of people own land that is just sitting there but they have utilities turned on,” said Bayne.

Brown admitted city staff failed to follow up with the stop work order but added it came down to the assumption that Athlon would follow the law.

“The assumption was that people would respect that stop work order. Just like we have stop signs up and we expect you to stop but not everyone does. We failed in that area but there are some things we are correcting now.

“I can’t go back to 2023, but the only thing we can do is assure you that we have learned some things about ourselves and this is one area we will be attacking and be able to address,” said Brown.

put in that effort that I was wanting out of my college profession and that made me think I could do it and then have an opportunity here in Clinton and just made me feel like I should do it because it's Clinton, it's my hometown and I care a lot for these people," Goodblanket said.

Giving it a shot, Goodblanket was accepted into the position and felt very grateful and happy to be of service and to take on the position.

Coming full circle, Goodblanket felt surreal as a former student coming into a teaching role at Clinton High School. The celebratory moment made him think of his brother, Mah-hi-vist Goodblanket who was also a former Clinton High School student.

"It's an honor, it's a privilege, I can't help but also think about my brother too because he walked these halls and he had his ups and downs here too and I just think about him and I know he's proud of me and I think that it's a good thing. I don't take it lightly but it's also very rewarding in many ways and just seeing it come full circle, progressing in a positive way," Goodblanket said.

With Clinton Public Schools offering Native American Studies, Goodblanket feels it's very significant due to the history and heritage at Clinton being primarily native and a Cheyenne and Arapaho town. Some of which will be included throughout his curriculum, as a lot of the stories will entail more toward the end of the school year, when it becomes more contemporary and modern and the class is learning ancient times.

When the class gets into modern day, Goodblanket will reference Clinton and how natives were camped outside of Clinton and how they eventually made their way into houses, called tribal housing.

"Clinton is very rich in history, culture and heritage as well as just the wrongful doings as Clinton has done, just with the government police force, and with this effort, with this class, any ill feelings can be mended," Goodblanket said.

The Native American Studies class is offered as an elective for high school students and is flexible for Goodblanket as he will have full ability to create his own curriculum. He will also teach the middle school and elementary school children. For the first half of the semester for middle school and high school, the class entails oral traditions.

"The younger kids like third grade under, they will get oral stories most likely throughout the whole school year just to make it light, just to make it fun and inclusive of all tribes as well. Right now we're doing the great plains, so we cover the Kiowa, the Pawnees and the Cheyenne," Goodblanket said.

Taking on the role of an educator and teacher in the community of Clinton, Goodblanket's goals include empowering students and to show them that they can do anything they set their mind to. That they can do it, they can accomplish it.

"Even though they may have self doubt or other people, other outside sources make it difficult, that if you just keep trying, you can persevere, no matter what, because I know things happen even though you don't necessarily see it coming but having persevered, how we keep going and how we keep moving, will make the difference, so just being that helping hand and encouraging these students to become adults," Goodblanket said.

With the incorporation of Native American Studies at Clinton High School, Principal Michelle Sorter said Oklahoma is rich in Native American culture and Clinton is no exception and it is important for students to have the opportunity to learn tribal history and traditions.

"Clinton is a community proud of its traditions. Incorporating Native American Studies as a course for our students provides one more layer of that tradition and enriches all of us," Sorter said.

Currently, 19.89% of the high school students identify as Native American or are of Native American descent that are enrolled at Clinton High School.

Sorter said the course will give the students an opportunity to gain insight to the history, traditions and customs of Native American Tribes and their impact on Oklahoma, the United States and Clinton.

With the selection of Goodblanket to lead the Native American Studies curriculum, Sorter values having educators in the building who reflect and understand the diverse experiences of the students.

"Mr. Ahk-ta-na-hi Goodblanket is not only deeply knowledgeable in Native American studies, but brings a lived experience of the culture's rich customs and traditions. A Clinton native, he has grown through the community and school system in which he now serves and knows on a personal level the challenges our students may face, his connection to the students and community is an asset that cannot be understated or measured," Sorter said.

the years he spent working alongside both Miles and Bushyhead.

“I can remember when we were all three working together at housing and Clara and Gib would be talking back and forth and Gib slamming his fist down when he wanted to make a final point and Clara just saying, ‘Oh, no, we’re not, Gib,’” Wassana said, laughing as he reminisced about the many years they spent working together.

One of Wassana’s fondest memories of Miles was his sense of humor. Although Wassana said he sometimes didn’t quite understand the joke, Miles always had a joke and a laugh ready.

Lt. Gov. Hershel Gorham also shared memories of Miles, saying he had known him from an early age when Miles and Gorham’s older brother were both athletes playing college sports.

“I remember one time we were sitting in a meeting with the legislature and Gib had some kind of paper, a newspaper, and every time someone would say something, he would hold up that newspaper and look at me, making faces. I had a hard time trying not to laugh and at one point had to excuse myself because I couldn’t hold back the laughter,” Gorham said.

Gorham also spoke about his memories of Bushyhead, saying he met her after moving to El Reno in the ninth grade because she worked with his mother.

“Clara always would tell me my mother would be proud of me, and that meant a lot to me,” Gorham said.

Zachary Blackowl, Bushyhead’s son, spoke from the podium and recalled the many days he and his sister, Connor, spent at the tribal complex late into the night while their mother worked.

He said his mother was dedicated to her tribe and her people throughout her life.

Blackowl expressed his gratitude for the memorial bench and the opportunity it provides to keep his mother’s memory, and Miles, alive for generations to come.

“Years from now, people won’t know who my mom or Gib were, but they will see these benches and want to know their story, so their story will continue to be told,” he said.

Blackowl said he was especially happy the benches honoring Miles and Bushyhead were placed near one another because of the great friendship the two shared throughout the years.

“Gib was the first person to show up for our family after the death of our mom when we needed people the most, and we will never forget that,” he said.

Mahgan Muskett, the eldest daughter of Miles, was chosen to serve as the family’s spokesperson.

As she stepped to the podium and glanced over at the memorial bench bearing her father’s photograph, she opened her remarks with a quote from Abraham Lincoln:

“If I were to try to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the very best I know how, the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won’t amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, 10 angels swearing I was right would make no difference.”

Muskett said that when she learned about the memorial dedication, she searched through her father’s Bible for something she thought he would want said.

What she found was something she had written down following the many conversations she and Gib had about the qualities of a good leader and what makes a good leader.

“It is a leader’s responsibility to choose to focus on service rather than defend every point of criticism ...”

Gib Miles: A Life Rooted in Family, Faith and Service

Gib Miles was born in Oklahoma City on Nov. 24, 1955, to LeRoy LaMott and Melba (Sharp) Miles, where he predominantly grew up.

At age 13, his family moved to Yukon, Okla., where he later graduated from Yukon High School in 1974.

It was in Yukon where his basketball talent and skills developed as he became the starting point guard for the Yukon Millers State Championship basketball team.

He was recruited to further his basketball career and education at Bethany Nazarene University, now known as Southern Nazarene University.

In the summer of 1974, Miles was selected for the Western All-Star team. He traveled with his team to Peru, Mexico, Brazil and Colombia, doing mission work and competing against numerous national teams.

During his college years, he spent three months as an intern in Washington, D.C. He went on to earn his Bachelor of Political Science degree from Bethany Nazarene University.

Cheyenne and Arapaho Gov. Reggie Wassana shares some of his fondest memories of the late Lt. Gov. Gib Miles and the late Clara Bushyhead during a dedication ceremony for new memorial benches installed at the Tribal Headquarters in Concho, Okla. (Photos / Rosemary Stephens)

Miles began working in the oil and gas industry as a landman and worked as an EMT-paramedic for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes.

In 1985, Miles moved his family — daughters Mahgan, Mallory, Mariel and Mariah, from Yukon to his grandmother’s homeplace in Geary, Okla.

He eventually returned to his roots in the oil and gas industry, forming his own business, Stalking Energy LLC, in 1994.

Miles served as a member of the Geary School Board, was a leader of the men’s group for the Geary United Methodist Church and served on the Housing Board for the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes’ Department of Housing.

He coached youth basketball teams throughout his life and continued playing recre-ationally until his health no longer allowed him to.

Friends and family remember Miles as a person who never met a stranger. He often spoke openly about how basketball saved his life and was a follower of Jesus Christ.

Those who knew him best say that, after his faith, his four daughters and grandchildren were always his number one priority.

Clara Bushyhead: A Fierce Advocate for Tribal Youth

Clara Bushyhead was born July 3, 1964, in Clinton, Okla., to Charles “Henry” Dawes Bushyhead and Kathleen Bushyhead.

She was predominantly raised in El Reno, Okla., where she graduated from El Reno High School.

Bushyhead was employed with the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes for many years, attended school full time.

“By the grace of God and my family helping me, I did it,” she said. “Some days I met myself coming and going.”

Her son was only 5 years old at the time.

One of her classes was held on weekends in Duncan, and her father helped make it possible.

On Friday evenings, her father would drive Whiteman and her young son to Duncan. She would attend class all day Saturday and Sunday while her family supported her from the sidelines.

Her father was a firm believer in education. Whiteman remembers graduating from MacArthur High School on a Friday. The following Monday, her father woke her up.

“We need to get to Cameron,” he told her.

She asked why.

“Summer school is about to start.”

Whiteman laughed as she remembered telling him she needed a break.

His response?

“You had Saturday and Sunday. Now let’s goooo.”

“Honestly, I was in school non-stop for five years straight,” she said.

There was one more hurdle to overcome before becoming an official counselor. Whiteman had to pass the state examination required for her counseling certification. She remembers sitting in a large gymnasium in Oklahoma City with countless other people taking their tests. She had worked so hard to reach that point that the pressure was overwhelming.

“I thought to myself, ‘I’m going to finish this master’s degree, but what happens if I don’t pass that test?’”

When the test results finally arrived, her father received them. Whiteman was at school and she asked him to open the results. He hesitated.

“Dad, you’ve got to do this now because I’m about to have a mental crash!” she remembers telling him.

Finally, he found the score. Whiteman knew she needed at least a 70. Her father looked at the result and asked her what she needed to pass. When she told him he blurted out, “You got a 92!”

That was May.

She was hired in June at about 34 years old.

The experience became a story Whiteman would later share with students who were contemplating higher education themselves. She tells them not to be intimidated by the work required to reach their goals.

“I tell you this story not to shine a light on me, but to let you know that it can be done,” she said.

Her message is one she has carried throughout her career, if you want something badly enough, you have to be willing to do what it takes.

“Believe me, if you want something bad enough, you will jump through any hoop to get there,” she said. “You will understand what it means to do what it takes, to be what it takes to get there ... and you will get there.”

Whiteman spent 27 years with Lawton Public Schools before joining Riverside Indian School in 2012.

She had always wanted to work at Riverside. She wanted to work with Native children. Although she had worked with Native students during her years in the public school system, Riverside offered something different.

“Being here around all the Native kids, Native staff, their parents, brings a whole different dynamic to my career, to my job,” she said.

And then there is the reward of watching students change.

“To be able to see our kids excel and actually see them start to believe in themselves, it’s special and exciting,” she said.

For Whiteman, that connection is also personal.

She grew up in Hominy, Oklahoma, surrounded by her Osage family and grandparents.

“I grew up old,” she said, explaining that she spent much of her childhood with her grandparents and their brothers and sisters.

She learned traditions and culture from them. Her father, Wendell Whiteman, is half Cheyenne and half Arapaho. Her mother, Maria Brown Whiteman, was a product of the boarding school era and attended Concho.

Her parents met at Concho, where her grandfather, Alfred Whiteman Sr., served for many years on the Tribal Council. Whiteman has two sisters, and the girls lived with their grandparents while their parents established their careers. Eventually, the family moved from Hominy to Lawton when her parents went to work for Indian Health Services.

She graduated from Lawton MacArthur, describing the move from Hominy to Lawton as a culture shock.

She later earned her undergraduate degree from Cameron University, followed by a master’s degree in education from Southwestern Oklahoma State University and a second master’s degree in counseling through a combined effort between Oregon State University and East Central University.

Her educational journey prepared her for the work she would eventually make her life’s mission.

Over 35 years, there have been countless students. Some she remembers because they succeeded. Others she remembers because they needed someone to refuse to give up on them.

One young man was part of Whiteman’s first class of students.

He struggled in school and wanted to associate with students who were making poor choices. He often challenged authority and resisted anyone trying to tell him what to do.

Whiteman kept working with him. She reminded him that eventually he would have to grow up and make decisions about his future. After he graduated, Carla Whiteman has been a school counselor for over 35 years, dedicating her life helping tribal youth to succeed in life.

she lost touch with him. But she continued hearing about him. She heard he was doing better. He was not incarcerated. He was building a life. Whiteman would tell his family to tell him that Ms. Whiteman was still pulling for him.

Then, years later, Whiteman was serving as the emcee for a Comanche graduation banquet.

She was reading the names of graduates from a list when she reached a familiar name.

It was him. And he had earned a master’s degree.

Whiteman stopped the ceremony.

“I said, ‘What? We’ve got to stop right here. I’m sorry, I’ve got to stop right here,’” she recalled.

She told the audience that the young man she was about to introduce had “made me earn my dollar” when she first started her career.

Then she announced that he had earned a master’s degree in business and was now the general manager of a casino in Red River.

She had no idea.

TC COORDINATORS

Christopher Roman Nose

Christopher R. Roman Nose is an enrolled tribal member who was born at the Lawton Indian Hospital and raised in the Watonga community. His roots in the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes and his lifelong connection to the tribal community have shaped his commitment to serving tribal citizens.

Roman Nose is the son of Quinton and LaDonna Roman Nose. He is the brother of Marla Roman Nose, Milan Roman Nose Jr., and Parry Roman Nose.

He is the grandson of the late Milan and Susie Roman Nose and the late Ernest Brooks and Ruth Yellowman Brooks, who is 91 years old.

Roman Nose is a graduate of Watonga High School and the University of Oklahoma. His professional experience includes employment with Oklahoma City University, the Chickasaw Nation, the Cheyenne and Arapaho Housing Authority, and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes.

Through his education and professional career, Roman Nose has gained experience working in both tribal and non-tribal settings, giving him a broad perspective on the needs and concerns of tribal citizens.

As a candidate for Tribal Council Coordinator, Roman Nose believes the Tribal Council branch plays an important role in the Tribes’ four-branch government.

One of his primary goals is to improve communication between tribal citizens who live outside their districts and those living outside the state and the tribal government. He believes all tribal members should have meaningful opportunities to communicate with their elected leaders and have their concerns heard.

Roman Nose also wants to advocate for fair and equal services for all tribal citizens, regardless of where they live. Another priority is ensuring tribal members have fair opportunities for employment within both the Tribes’ gaming enterprises and government operations.

Roman Nose said his goal is to help strengthen communication, representation and opportunities for all tribal citizens while contributing to an effective and accountable Tribal Council branch.

Sarah Pedro

Hello Tribal Members! My name is Sarah Pedro. I am a Proud Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribal Member. I would like to send a warm welcome to all the new tribal members who have recently enrolled. Your participation in Tribal Affairs are greatly appreciated. My parents are the late William Lee Pedro and Lela Pedro of El Reno. My parents on my maternal side were the Late Rufus and Sarah YellowEagle and my paternal side were the late William Lee Pedro and Eileen Pen. I come from humble beginnings as a grandchild growing up in a ceremonial family i was always taught to be kind, generous and helpful to all our tribal people. Teachings I still carry with me today. I attend college at OSU-OKC for criminal Justice police science in support of my pursuit of Justice for many of our tribal people facing injustice dealing with the state’s judicial system. Being a single mother raising 3 kids alone has given me a very different perspective of daily struggle that many of us face daily. I am sober for close to 2 years. I have worked with the Tribes 3 branches of Government throughout the years with many of our leaders. I worked with Arapaho District 2. Cheyenne District 1, Legislative Speakers office, Executive office with Economic Development under the late Marlin Hawks supervision, as well as the Tribal council with Pete Salinas and Jennifer Wilkerson. Throughout my experience it has allowed me to become knowledgeable with the process and proper procedures of how each branch functions with one another. My passion to help our Native American people has allowed me the opportunity to be an advocate for our rights as individuals a more important as indigenous people. I am currently an American Indian Movement member with the AIM Indian territory of Oklahoma chapter. I do volunteer work with CRNOK out of Oklahoma City. I am also an LAndBack Network member with NDN Collective advocating for indigenous lands across the United States. More recently I have volunteered my time to work with the campaign for Cyndi Munson whose running for Oklahomas next Governor. I enjoy working with all these organizations to empower our people and share space with them on learning from one another. My passion is our people. I ask for tribal members support in electing me as the next Tribal Council coordinator. My promise to the people will be that of advocating for our tribal women, elders and children’s rights. Every tribal members story matters and your voice matters on the success of our great nation.

I look forward to seeing everyone at the upcoming tribal council meeting.

As head coach for the Clinton Mock Trial Team for eight years, Ashley Kelley, said she feels proud of the team. At the end of the 2025-2026 school year, the team had talked about applying to Empire. Kelley feels the kids have it in them to win big and wants to put them on the stage at a national competition, so they can experience that.

“It’s a whole different dynamic than that of like our state competition than we’ve been doing, Clinton is known for it’s national placement, fourth place in 2012, it’ll be 15 years ago come this spring and I want these kids who are literally the crème of the crop at Clinton High School to experience a different form of Mock Trial Competition,” Kelley said.

Attending Empire will test their knowledge and their skills, help build up their team early so that when they do get their state case at the end of October, they’re set and the leadership on the team, is impeccable, Kelley said.

“I have been working non stop behind the scenes getting everything ready for the trip, making sure that we’re booked and paid for and working on donors and they’ve been having practices,” Kelley said.

The team hosts anywhere from four to six practices, working one on one with each other, with captains taken on leadership roles, so they can build their team and be the best. The competition at Empire has the same amount of teams that was in the state competition the team faced last year with 36 teams. But the teams are not just from Philadelphia, or Pennsylvania, they’re from all over the nation.

“I think it’s very important for people to understand that while this is a national style competition, this is not nationals for us, we’re using this as a learning tool to build up our program so that we can be best in the state of Oklahoma and go back to nationals in May because these kids are hungry for a win, a big win,” Kelley said.

Mock trial has been at Clinton High School since the 1980’s, with several people who have been in the program and have gone on to work in the legal profession. Kelley was also in the program and her mother was the coach for a long time until her passing 10 years ago. Kelley was asked to step in and help with that team, they went on to place third in state that year.

“I just kind of took over the program, which is fine and I love it, but anybody you ask, this is why I teach. This program is why I’m a teacher, it means so much to me, for these kids to come in to class, not only learn the law, but to learn vital life skills, public speaking, having confidence, advocating for yourself,” Kelley said.

As Clinton Public Schools first time to ever be selected to attend Empire, Kelley said she looks forward to the different things the team can do in the competition.

“They have to do a motion in limine beforehand, it’s called a pre-trial argument and they have to argue a specific thing, based off real life cases, that wrote laws and they have 45 seconds to do it, so that’s one thing that’s different, the other thing that’s different is two of our students will be guest witnesses that will score points for our team, but they won’t actually compete with us,” Kelley said.

Kelley said the students will go and meet with their team 30-45 minutes prior to a trial and will go sit in another courtroom with the team that they’re working with and score points for the team, they will never be with the team. That’s something new and exciting, Kelley said.

Preparing for mock trials, Kelley said the team goes over material in class, basic material they need to know as they’ve been good about using class time to work on questions, run their parts and staying caught up on their homework, as they can have up to three-hour practices.

With 35 other schools the Clinton High School Mock Trial Team could potentially see, they will face off against four or five teams.

“Mock trial is very much a points based system, what you score depends on where you’re ranked and that will kind of tell them where they are by who they’re competing against too and they may lose the first round and end up in the finals playing the top team, just because of points and mock trial is a very subjective competition, which sometimes is the funnest,” Kelley said.

To attend the Empire Mock Trial in Philadelphia, the team has been fundraising as they have to raise a total of $15,000 which Kelley said they have not quite reached yet. Having just had a golf tournament where they raised $5,000 and with donations from all over the community, local lawyers, businesses and even a $2,000 donation from the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes Department of Education for the trip, Kelley said she’s thankful for the community support.

“I’m very thankful for community support, support from the tribe, because this program changes lives and I say that and I know the kids will say join. But I will say mock trial is not for everyone. You have to be willing to put in time, put in the effort, open your minds, open your heart and open the door for yourself so you can make these friends and be part of this family so that you can learn from them and with them to grow into what it takes to really be a mock trial student,” Kelley said.

Clinton High School Principal, Michelle Sorter said being invited to compete at a national level is an honor for the students and showcases the hard work and talents the school sees in them everyday.

“This opportunity gives our students one more place to be involved, shine and pursue their career field with a head start in their experience. The program develops well spoken, detail oriented students. It gives them an advantage in their interviewing skills and in seeing events from alternate perspectives, while affording them the opportunity to practice with other goal driven individuals,” Sorter said.

serving in different capacities throughout her career.

She served on the El Reno Main Street Board and, at the time of her death, was the public relations officer for Lucky Star Casinos. In that role, she built relationships throughout western Oklahoma between communities and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes.

Bushyhead was a strong advocate for tribal youth and spent many years working on programs promoting substance abuse prevention.

Among those efforts was the Tradition Not Addiction program, launched in 2014, through which she worked closely with the Southern Plains Health Board.

She was quoted as saying, “You have to go after the whole community. You can’t just target the kids. Where are those kids getting alcohol? The number one response they gave us was ‘at home.’ Sometimes you have to be real with folks.”

Outside of her work, some of Bushyhead’s favorite activities included attending concerts, as she was an avid music enthusiast, making jewelry, watching OU football, traveling and spending time with her family.

She had two sons, Zachary Blackowl and Andy Mendez, and one daughter, Connor Bushyhead.

Friends and family remember Bushyhead as a loving and dedicated mother and friend, as well as a fierce advocate for tribal youth, sobriety and tribal sovereignty. Above all, they remember her love for her family.

The memorial benches now stand near each other beneath the trees at the tribal complex, a permanent reminder of two lives devoted to family, community and the Cheyenne and Arapaho people.

For those who knew Gib Miles and Clara Bushyhead, the benches are more than memorials. They are places where stories can begin and where future generations can learn about two people who gave their lives in service to their people.

Zachary Blackowl, son of the late Clara Bushyhead speaks from his heart about growing up with a mother dedicated to serving tribal citizens throughout her life.

Short film shot in Clinton, uses all tribal citizens as cast and crew

Christian Jacobsen, Clinton Daily News

Annette Nowlin and her brother, Josh Sorter, co-directed a short film called “The Red Echoes.” Nowlin was inspired to make her own film after having been included in the film making process before with her daughter, Brynlee Nowlin. She said, “Brynlee has been in a few short films before, and a lot of them did not make a lot of sense to me. They didn’t have much of a plot, so basically my brother, Sorter, said, ‘We could do something better.’”

After filming for a month in 2025, the film “The Red Echoes” was complete. She describes the film as, “In a Native American community, a young woman mysteriously disappears without a trace. As her mother and children embark on a journey to uncover the truth behind her disappearance, they receive some much-needed assistance.”

When asked what she enjoyed the most about making the film she said, “My favorite part is actually watching what we created afterward. I’m really excited to get all the pieces together because whenever we film, we don’t always film in chronological order, and then we do several takes from several different viewpoints, so actually seeing it all put together is always great.”

However, Nowlin does report there was a slight learning curve at the beginning of learning how to film. “Something unexpected that happened is our very first scene that we filmed we ended up throwing it in the trash. I’ve been on so many film sets and felt like we can do it no problem, but we had no idea what we were doing. It was only after watching our first scene we filmed did we realize we needed to work on our camera setup and lighting. We both went home and looked up a bunch of YouTube videos on lighting and angles and got back to it.” She describes the next steps toward applying a film into film festivals. “If you’re submitting to film festivals, you will put it on YouTube, but it has to be on private, because you can’t publicly release it. Then you get a Filmfreeway.com account and upload it there. Filmfreeway.com is where you place the stills from the film, credits to the directors and actors, a link to the film, and sign up for film festivals in your state, or around the country. We focused on Native American film festivals and Oklahoma film festivals for our short film.”

After submitting to the festivals, the website then lists the progress of being accepted or not, and notifies when that festival will be held. “We were selected for five festivals for our film,” said Nowlin. “We got accepted into Red Brick Road Festival, Native Lens, American Motion Pictures, Tulsa Underground, and Bare Bones International Film and Music Festival. The Red Brick Road will be premiering our film Oct. 9 in Pauls Valley.”

When asked how it felt for their film to be chosen she said, “We were super nervous because we had no idea if it was good. I mean I know it is good, but good enough to compete with other people or even premiere with people doing this for years was very nerve-wracking.

“Our very first premiere was in Durango, Colo., and only six short films were selected. Two of those were student films in collaboration with the festival, so technically only four were selected, and we were one of them. Afterward we were at a mixer and the people in attendance kept coming up and saying, ‘Oh my gosh, your film was so good!’

“Tami Graham with KSUT Four Corners

Public Radio, also the executive director of Native Lens as well as leads the Durango Independent Film Festival, told us that when our film was playing every single person in the audience was holding their breath. She told us it was good, so we did get some really good feedback.”

With their next festival planned for October, Nowlin was able to share, “We are working on a new short film for our next production. It is planned to be a horror story, but that’s all I can say right now.”

Nowlin shares some advice to people thinking about making their own films. “Pick up a camera and just start filming. Tell your own stories. The film industry in Oklahoma is so much bigger than I think anybody realizes. The film industry has been booming because there are so many different incentives to film in Oklahoma, you can even get rebates on what you’ve spent.”

She references the website Okfilmmusic.org in which interested parties can look up incentives for creating a film in Oklahoma, how to get started or even find work in the film industry, search for Oklahoma musicians and music instructors, or find a production team available for a project.

Nowlin says to anybody wanting to start a new project or hobby, “Find something you’re passionate about and go create something.”

Lady Chiefs Sweep Capps Middle School in Strong Volleyball Performance

Darlington Lady Chiefs Varsity Volleball team

The Lady Chiefs volleyball teams turned in a strong performance Sept. 10 against their opponent Capps Middle School.

“I was so excited for him,” she said.

Whiteman became emotional as she recalled the young man’s story. He had lost his mother in a tragic car accident when he was only 10 years old and struggled after her death. Whiteman said she told him she could not bring his mother back but she could help him find a way to honor her. She told him he could honor his mother by becoming a good father, being a good citizen and giving back to his community.

When she saw him years later, Whiteman thought about how proud his mother would have been. She told him as much.

He already knew.

“I wouldn’t be here if you had not sat me down and talked to me,” he told her.

For Whiteman, those words were another kind of award.

“Thank you for validating that for me,” she remembers thinking.

Another student Whiteman remembers is Nancy.

Nancy became pregnant during her senior year of high school. At the time, teenage pregnancy carried a significant stigma, and Nancy had decided she was not going back to school. Whiteman went to her home.

She knocked on the door. Nancy answered.

“I’m not going to school,” she told Whiteman.

Whiteman’s response was immediate.

“Oh yes, yes you are.”

She told Nancy she would pick her up every day if she had to.

Lawton had recently established a school specifically designed to help pregnant students finish high school. Nancy had already tried to enroll but was told it was full.

Whiteman was not willing to accept that answer.

“We’re going to get you in it,” she told her.

Then she told Nancy to get ready for school.

Nancy protested that she did not really want to do it.

“I really didn’t ask if you wanted to,” Whiteman told her.

She explained that Nancy needed to complete her high school diploma for herself and her baby because without that diploma, too many doors would be closed.

Nancy listened.

She graduated.

Years later, Whiteman watched that same young woman become a successful adult, wife and mother.

She became deeply involved in education and eventually became head of the Johnson-O’Malley program at her school. Whiteman later served as the emcee for a powwow at the school.

As she watched Nancy speak, Nancy publicly credited Whiteman for helping her stay in school.

“I wouldn’t be here if it wasn’t for this lady behind me,” Nancy said.

For Whiteman, watching her former student walk across that stage was an emotional and joyful moment.

It was proof of what can happen when someone refuses to let a young person give up on themselves.

“I get emotional about these things because this is my life’s work,” Whiteman said. “This is my mission in life.”

That mission continues every day at Riverside.

Whiteman says many of the students who come through the school simply need someone to believe in them.

“A lot of kids that come through this building just need someone to believe in them and to tell them, ‘You are worth the effort,’” she said.

Many Riverside students come from across the country. For some, being away from home for the first time can be difficult. They are homesick and they are learning for the first time how to live independently. They are learning responsibility.

Whiteman tells them to give Riverside a chance, “Just give us two weeks and let us grow on you,” she tells them.

She wants students to understand that Riverside is more than a school. It is preparation for life. They will not always be 16 years old. One day they will be 18,

“How is it going to empower me to be able to give back to you,” - Carla Whiteman and the world will expect them to be responsible, productive and willing to give back to their communities.

Every day, students fill Whiteman’s office. They talk about everything under the sun. Sometimes the conversation is about school. Sometimes it is about home. Sometimes it is about a future that the student is not yet sure how to imagine. Whatever the subject, Whiteman listens.

“I have kids in this office every single day and we talk about everything under the sun,” she said.

And behind that desk, she continues doing the work she has done for more than three decades.

“That’s why I sit behind this desk and do what I do ... to help our kids succeed in life.”

After 35 years, retirement is not yet on Whiteman’s immediate horizon.

She believes all roads led her to Riverside, and she expects it is where she will eventually finish her career.

“I’ve been doing this for a long time,” she said. “And I’ve heard it said you will know when it’s time to retire, and I haven’t come to that crossroads yet.”

Until that day comes, she will continue showing up.

She will continue answering questions.

She will continue challenging students who need to be challenged.

She will continue encouraging students who need encouragement.

And she will continue believing in young people, sometimes before they are ready to believe in themselves.

For anyone considering a career as a counselor, Whiteman offers advice rooted in the experience of a lifetime.

If the desire is already there, she believes there is a reason for it.

“You have to have a love of children to go into counseling,” she said. “Be able to love them unconditionally, not be judgmental and be able to meet them where they are at.”

Then comes the most important part.

“Hopefully take them where they need to go.”

For Carla Whiteman, that has been the work of a lifetime.

And judging by the former students who continue to return to her with stories of degrees earned, families built, communities served and dreams realized, the journey has made a difference.

The awards she received may have placed her name on a stage.

But the real measure of Whiteman’s career can be found in the young people who walked through her office doors uncertain of themselves and eventually walked back into the world knowing they were capable of becoming something more.

For them, Ms. Whiteman was there.

And she believed.

OBITUARIES

Victor White Bird Orange

Victor White Bird (Vé'késóhvó'komaestse) Orange was not born in a hospital, but was delivered by old medicine people of his tribe on Aug. 11, 1945. He passed from this earth on Aug. 25, 2026

His mother was Bertha Orange and his father was Fred Hoffman. He was given to his aunt Maxine Candy, who raised him for the first two years of his life, and then to his great-grandmother Voostah (White Buffalo Woman) and Perry Reynolds, who raised him until about the age of 5 or 6 when they both passed on. From then on, he was raised by his grandma Laura Black Bear and his grandfather Emil Miles.

Victor was a high school basketball star and graduated from Hammon High School in 1963. He met his first wife, Janet, in Taos, and they married in 1974. In 1976, they adopted their first daughter LaDonna, whose mother was Cynthia Donna Whiteskunk, from the hospital when she was born. In 1977, the three of them moved to the Bay Area in California, where he began studies at the University of California, Berkeley in engineering. They had their second daughter, Carrie, in 1979. Victor graduated in 1980 with a B.A. in Native American Studies and a minor in engineering. In 1982, they had their third child, a son, Tommy.

After graduating from Cal, Victor began working at Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, earning his State of California engineering license in 1987 and remaining with the lab until his early retirement in 1995. He divorced his first wife Janet, in 1996. Victor had his second son Austin in 2000, and his third daughter Hope in 2002, both with his second wife, Prairie Lundberg (now Prairie Boulmier. They married in 2002. In 2005, he was diagnosed with Stage IV lymphoma and was cured of cancer in ceremony that same year. Victor met his third wife, Kayt Schneider (now Kayt Whitebird Orange), in 2006, and they married in 2007, later divorcing in late 2016.

Victor lived with his daughter Carrie and Ezra Lehi in Oklahoma from 2014 to 2024. During that time, he worked for the tribe toward the revitalization of the Cheyenne language. He lived with and was cared for by his son Austin and his daughter Hope for the past year and a half of his life.

In mid-July, Victor went to the hospital for gallbladder surgery, then ended up in the ICU. After making a miraculous recovery out of the ICU over a period of about two weeks, he succumbed to an infection resulting from the initial surgery, and passed away peacefully at Rust Presbyterian Hospital in Rio Rancho, New Mexico.

In many ways Victor lived many lives, made family and friends everywhere he went, and never stopped praying for those he loved. He knew a thousand peyote songs and a thousand jokes. The only thing he loved more than being with his family or being in ceremony was telling a good joke and making people laugh, and he did, all the way up until the very end. He was one of the last fluent language speakers of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma. Victor will be dearly missed by all who knew him.

He is survived by his brothers, Melvin, Ricky, and Rector Candy, his sisters, Laura and Veronica Candy and his children, LaDonna Orange, Carrie Lehi, Tommy Orange, Austin Orange and Hope Orange. He is also survived by his grandchildren, Christina Pedersen, Felix Orange, Faith Rodriguez, Ella Lehi, Wesley Lehi, and Solomon Orange and his great-grandchildren, Ares Ira Evans, Ha-lea Faith Evans, and Isla Jane Pedersen.

ATHLETE'S SPOTLIGHT

Latoya Lonelodge, Senior Reporter

Andre Lime, Clinton High School

CLINTON, Okla. - Lining up on the defensive end, Cheyenne and Arapaho youth, Andre Lime, 18, is a force to be reckoned with in his senior year on the football field.

Standing 6'2, Lime plays right tackle and defensive tackle for the Clinton High School football team.

Born in Woodward, Okla., and raised in the Clinton, Okla., community, Lime began playing football in the second grade when his father signed him up.

"I just really fell in love with the game," Lime said.

Playing football, what Lime has come to love the most is creating bonds with the people he's met through playing and winning games.

His biggest motivation for continuing to play comes from his family.

"My parents, my family and just being supported, the decisions I make," Lime said.

With his senior year kicking off, Lime looks forward to enjoying the season ahead as he grew up playing football and it's all he's ever known. It's the only sport he's ever stuck with and isn't sure how he feels knowing this will be his last year playing in high school.

"I hope to try to take it to the next level if I can, but if not just be good and just work hard really," Lime said.

Growing as a football player through the years, Lime credits learning everything as much as he could as he's gotten used to it playing the sport as much as he did.

"Being coachable and able to learn new things," Lime said.

Maintaining a 3.0 GPA, Lime best juggles school and football by staying on top of his school work.

"I try to get it done in class that way if I can't, I barely have any to do at home, just staying focused really," Lime said.

Training all week for football during school practices, Lime focuses more of his time training to get better at using his hands on the field. And the best way to improve his game is working at it.

"Just getting off blocks better," Lime said.

As a football player, Lime believes it's important to have good health by watching what you eat and to be able to learn on the field.

"If you don't watch your health you can get hurt really bad, and then being able to learn because there's a lot to learn and it's not easy, they got to be coachable," Lime said.

With this being his senior year of football and final season of playing, Lime hopes to leave the field and be remembered as the player with a hard work ethic and who was always there for others.

What football has taught Lime the most is his work ethic and being able to learn, which he believes will take him far in the long run.

Overall, when he's out there playing on game nights, playing football makes Lime feel the thrills and excitement of being out on the field under the Friday night lights.

"It makes me excited, just everybody being there, it's just fun," Lime said.

After graduating in the spring of 2027, Lime plans to further his education and attend college to study business.

Andre's parents are Robert Lime and Vivian Lime. His grandmother is Charlene Mendoza. His siblings are Lillian Lime, Cam'Ron Lime and Kyiah Lime. Andre's uncle is Victor Mendoza.
