

John Deere ATTA Cuts Crop Loss, Boosts Efficiency

In a ground breaking development for the agricultural sector, John Deere has unveiled its latest precision technology for sprayers, AutoTrac Turn Automation (ATTA), designed to help farmers save more crops and increase their profits. Now available on sprayers such as the John Deere 616R, ATTA offers automated turns at the end of field passes using pre-planned guidance lines, significantly reducing crop trampling.

AutoTrac Turn Automation and AutoTrac work together to maximize efficiency and precision in field operations. AutoTrac provides automated steering guidance, ensuring machinery follows precise, repeatable paths through the field. ATTA builds on this by managing the entire headland turn process. In tandem, these systems ensure accurate and consistent travel paths, so operators no longer need to manually perform complex maneuvers at the end of each pass.

The technology is particularly effective during sensitive crop stages like flowering or pod fill, where every saved bushel counts even more.

Tracks left in the field can affect the entire season, leading to later staging of crops, missed pesticide timing, variable harvest stages, and downed crops that need to be picked up by the combine.

From a manpower standpoint, ATTA enables operators to better focus on the field, adjust settings, and make proactive decisions. It also allows them to watch closely for field obstacles such as rocks and washouts.

With proper setup, productivity can be increased through faster, more efficient, and repeatable turns in the headland, even if the operator is less experienced.

Launched with the 25.2 software update, ATTA is set to become a key tool in reducing operator error and improving profitability in Western Canadian fields. This new feature is included with Automation 4.0 on Gen4 displays and the G5 Advanced license for machines that have a G5 display. ATTA is compatible with John Deere 400 and 600 series self-propelled sprayers, 800R floaters, and Hagie STS12, STS16 and STS20 sprayers, model year 2022 and newer.

This technology promises to be a game-changer for farmers looking to optimize their operations and maximize their yields. Stay tuned for more updates on how John Deere continues to innovate in the agricultural industry.
