Linda Fox

Linda has extensive experience advising both employers and employees on all aspects of workplace relations. Linda believes in taking a commercial approach, by finding a solution that works for all parties with the minimal amount of legal input. A practical solution often avoids escalation, if applied before position-taking has set in, if there is a dispute. Similarly, good drafting at the outset of an employment relationship and tailored to your workplace, will stand the test of time.

Beverly Hojabri

Beverly regularly advises employers on a wide range of workplace issues, including restructuring, disciplinary action, performance management, and restraints of trade. She has also acted for employees in personal grievance matters and minimum entitlement claims. Her particular expertise lies in employment-related mediations and litigation. She is a skilled negotiator, who focuses on prompt and pragmatic solutions to disputes.

Morgan Duckworth

Morgan has a diverse background on employment law matters and has advised both employers and employees on employment agreements, redundancies and restructuring, personal grievances and disciplinary processes, and complex workplace investigations. Her experience includes roles in senior HR management and recruitment, which has given her a commercial and pragmatic lens with which to approach employment matters. Morgan enjoys the people-focused aspect of employment law and understands what is needed to reach the best possible result for all parties involved.
