CASE STUDY SITUATION

You are the director of sales at EXCEED, a customer relationship management platform that works specifically with small businesses and entrepreneurs. EXCEED is an easy-to-use platform that helps small business owners set up their initial system for the business. EXCEED not only has sales representatives that help clients navigate needs but also has dedicated client representatives that are available to answer questions, has shared screen video conferencing and unlimited access to tutorials.

Customers praise the company for allowing small businesses to start out small with EXCEED, only purchasing elements that are needed at the time and then adding on as the business grows. Other customer relationship management platforms sell clients more than is needed or up-sell components that are not necessary.

The sales team at EXCEED has marketed directly to small business owners. New small businesses are found using public records like business license filings and state business registries. Business journals and news outlets are also used to locate prospective customers.

YOUR CHALLENGE

The president of EXCEED wants the sales team to use social selling strategies, specifically using LinkedIn. The president feels that LinkedIn is a great resource to easily find new small business owners and existing small business owners that would benefit from EXCEED.

The president wants you to determine how the sales team can use LinkedIn to search and find large groups of prospective clients and build a rapport with group members. The president then wants you to explain and demonstrate how the group can actively participate in the groups by:

- Demonstrating expertise
- Differentiating from competitors
- Assessing prospect needs

You will explain the social selling strategies to the president before introducing them to the sales team.
