Predictive protection: how Corrpro is redefining cathodic protection ahead of Columbus

For more than four decades, Corrpro has been a trusted name in cathodic protection engineering — but the company heading to Columbus in March 2027 looks very different from the one that walked the floor a decade ago. VP of Engineering Dana Reyes sat down with AMPP Media to talk about what's changed, what's coming, and why this year's expo matters more than ever for the pipeline integrity community.

"The conversation has shifted dramatically. We're not just talking about compliance anymore — we're talking about predictive protection, and Columbus is where that story gets told."
