Gain Critical Understanding and Practical Strategies for Engaging Students & Families in Creating a Restorative School Culture

This workshop is designed to provide ideas for rolling out Restorative Practices to students and families. Deciding when to include students and families is a key question for implementation.

It is easy to just start with the school staff and then move onto students and families. Given the time challenges in schools, this may be the easiest path to take. But it may too easily become an initiative that is done “TO” students and families and not “WITH”.

As you will learn in this workshop, there are four levels of engagement:

Low: Informing (keep them informed)

Mid: Listening (get feedback)

High: Including (co-creating)

Exceptional: Empowering (true ownership)

From every day tools for classroom teachers to strategies for school and district-wide implementation teams, this workshop will teach you how to achieve dramatic results engaging students and families in Restorative Practices.
