Corridor Garden

The exhibition draws its title from an earlier series of drawings with the same name, documenting corridor gardens in Singapore's public housing estates and celebrating how people make these in-between spaces their own.

With this collection of works, a corridor garden is created rather than depicted, informed by the improvisational nature of these places. Jolene is interested in how we construct artworks physically and conceptually, drawn to the by-products of art practice and incorporating materials from domestic life or the construction industry.

Jolene Liam

Jolene is an artist and architect from Singapore and based in London. She studied at Turps Art School, the University of Westminster and the National University of Singapore. Her practice explores different ways of thinking about and describing the places around us, from everyday and in-between spaces to imagined landscapes.

Working in the expanded, experimental field of drawing and painting enables Jolene to find new ways of interrogating space. The 'in-between' and the 'not quite' are her tools of choice, creating works that sit on the boundaries between drawing, painting and sculpture.
