Other Matters That Need Family Attention

Here's a checklist of actions that need completion in the period of time between your death and up to a year after. Check the boxes that apply to you, so your family members can take care of them later.

Contact the attorney to have the will read and to see what has to be done in regard to estate settlement.

Contact the Social Security Administration. Social Security pays a lump sum death benefit of $255. A surviving spouse can get survivor's benefits as early as age 60—earlier if a surviving spouse is disabled. Children under age 18 may also be entitled to survivor's benefits when a parent dies.

Call the Veterans Administration (VA). Surviving spouse and dependent children may be entitled to a small pension if the deceased served in the Armed Forces. The VA will pay partial burial expenses and provide a headstone or marker as well as an American flag to drape over the casket, without charge. If burial is in a national cemetery, the VA will provide a grave site and pay burial costs.

Notify organizations where the deceased held memberships. Some offer memorial services. They may have life insurance and may return part of dues paid.
Organizations to notify:

Contact former employers for benefits resulting from that employment. Refer to the list in the employment history section (see Page 8).

Collect life insurance policies and call the companies and ask for death claim forms. The beneficiary can choose to take proceeds in a lump sum or spread them out as payments over the years.

Contact companies holding retirement plans. There may be money left in them to be paid out to survivors. Like life insurance, proceeds can be paid out in a lump sum or in installments. Tax advisors should be consulted before beneficiaries make that decision.

Consult with the health insurance company. It may pay some expenses of your last illness. Future premiums may also be less if the policy has covered two or more people and now there will be one less person covered. Some health insurance policies are also combination policies that provide some death benefits.

Calculating The Worth of Your Estate

What is my estate really worth?

Generally, your "taxable estate" is the amount that remains after you have deducted all debt, charitable bequests, and other interests that pass on to your surviving spouse.

The next few pages will delineate and estimate the difference between the value of your estate and your net worth.

In order to do this, you will inventory your assets and liabilities so that you can estimate what you will leave for your heirs, minimize and calculate your estate taxes, and plan how your assets will be distributed. State, federal, and foreign taxes may also factor into your estate, but a tentative tax can be determined from your initial taxable estate.

Points to help understand the worksheets:

Sole ownership is what it sounds like: You hold the title in your name alone, even if you own the property with other people.

Joint tenancy means that you and I own the property together, and if one of us dies, the other gets it without the property passing through probate. The survivor files an affidavit saying the other titleholder is dead, attaches the death certificate and gets the property.

Tenancy in common: With tenancy in common, you and I own the property together, but upon my death, my interest is distributed according to my will or if I don't have a will, according to state law.

Note: Joint bank accounts and joint property ownership are not substitutes for a will.
