Professor of Economics and Public Policy, University of Michigan

Justin is driven by a simple mission: help people understand how economics shapes everyday life—paychecks and prices, risk and opportunity, policy and politics—and how everyday choices, in turn, shape the economy. His ability to turn complicated data into crisp, real-world insight earned him a place on the IMF's list of "25 economists under 45 shaping the way we think about the global economy," and helped launch his TV segment 'The Professor Is In' on MS NOW, where he breaks down the economic story behind the headlines.

Wolfers earned his PhD in economics from Harvard University and his undergraduate degree in economics from the University of Sydney in where he won the University Medal.
