

Jasmine Sun

Writer and Commentator on the Culture and Politics of AI

A compelling voice revealing how AI is reshaping our culture, politics, and everyday lives.

Biography

Jasmine Sun is a writer covering the culture and politics of AI on her Substack. She is also a contributor at The Atlantic, has published stories for outlets including the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal, and frequently discusses her reporting on podcasts such as The Ezra Klein Show, Odd Lots, Hard Fork, and NPR.

She produces deeply investigated pieces at the intersections of technology, society, and culture and has become one of the most trusted voices in tech. She doesn't recount the news, she uncovers the deeper stories behind the biggest headlines-- data centers and the disconnect between Main Street and Silicon Valley, the future of education, work and software, and the people behind the decisions and businesses at the frontier of technology.

Before pivoting to journalism in 2025, Jasmine spent 4 years at Substack, where she led the core product team and oversaw its top writers, mobile apps, podcast tools, and social features. She has also worked in AI policy research at Mozilla and Schmidt Futures. She has received fellowships from Emergent Ventures and the Omidyar Network's Reporters in Residence program. She lives in sunny San Francisco.
