Critical social science perspectives in chronic pain: results across multiple studies

October 5, 2026

Hart House, University of Toronto

PEPR is a SSHRC-funded research partnership that conducts innovative and inclusive research related to chronic pain and marginalization, with a special focus on exploring patient engagement in research through a critical social science lens.

Our upcoming research day will bring together our colleagues and members of the broader pain research community to share key insights from our projects while thinking about how these can be useful to researchers, clinicians, policy makers, and people with lived experience.
