

PROCEDURE MASK

Procedure masks have ear loops for easy donning and doffing which makes them a quick and convenient option for many types of users. A procedure mask is used to protect both the user and those around them from the transfer of respiratory secretions or other fluids and debris. They are typically worn when performing patient procedures, when patients are in isolation to protect them from potential contaminants, or for respiratory etiquette to help prevent the spread of germs when talking, coughing, or sneezing.

SURGICAL MASK

Surgical masks have ties so they can be adjusted for a more tailored fit. In medical settings, a surgical mask is used inside the operating room or in other sterile areas to protect the patient environment from contamination. For non-medical settings, surgical masks are a good alternative to procedure masks for users looking for a more snug feel. The customized fit can better prevent gaps along the face. The ties of the mask also remove pressure from behind the ears to help alleviate ear discomfort during prolonged use.
