The Australian National University (ANU) School of Art & Design (SOA&D) equips students with specialised skills for professional careers in the visual arts, media arts and design industries. Our philosophy embraces an interdisciplinary and flexible approach to art education, where new technologies augment traditional media.

Our staff are renowned practising artists and researchers who lead hands-on courses. We are internationally recognised for studio-based teaching across the disciplines of Ceramics, Design, Furniture, Glass, Jewellery & Object, Painting, Photography and Media Arts, Print-media and Drawing, Sculpture & Spatial Practice and Textiles. Our dedicated Centre for Art History and Art Theory (CAH & AT) offers acclaimed courses to develop critical thinking and curatorship skills.

Rasheed Araeen began making conceptual and abstract art in his hometown of Karachi in the late 1950s before moving to London in 1964, where he devised some of Britain's earliest minimalist sculptures. Now regarded as one of the pioneers of minimalist sculpture in the UK, Araeen is also an activist and a leading voice in challenging Eurocentric discourse around contemporary art. Though known for his sculpture, his artistic oeuvre has included abstract drawing and painting, collage, photography, multimedia and performance created over a career spanning six decades.

In the early 1970s, Araeen aligned himself with radical black movements and produced photographic, text and collage works reflecting his political motivations. His Black Manifesto on the future ...
