

Social & Emotional Skills with Stacey Griffiths

COURSE

In today's educational landscape, effectively assessing social and emotional learning (SEL) is crucial for student development. Stacey Griffiths' course, "Social & Emotional Skills," offers educators practical strategies to create meaningful assessments aligned with CASEL and SHAPE health standards.

About This Course

This interactive session focuses on:

Assessment Examples:

Providing concrete examples of assessments linked to CASEL's SEL competencies and SHAPE America's health standards.

Content Areas:

Covering topics such as sexuality education, mental health, and addictive substances and behaviours.

Step-by-Step Process:

Guiding participants through the creation of learning experiences that differ from traditional assessment models, emphasising the unique nature of SEL skills.

Interactive Workshop:

Engaging attendees in breakout sessions to discuss and develop initial ideas tailored to their educational settings.

Implementation Insights:

Sharing experiences on delivering and creating content with the support of administration, parents, and students.

Participants will leave with practical tools and a clear process for developing SEL assessments in their curricula.

About the Presenter:

Stacey Griffiths is a Health & Physical Education teacher at Singapore American School (SAS), passionate about building health and wellness programs for students transitioning beyond the school environment. Originally from Australia, Stacey has taught in Australia, the UK, and Japan before relocating to Singapore. With over 10 years of experience, she has honed skills in simplifying planning documents across various curriculum frameworks and personalising learning for all students. Stacey has presented her teaching practices at international conferences, including PHASE and EARCOS, and is currently developing SAS's Health Education curriculum to align with SEL and student well-being research.
