With so many channels to choose from, it used to be simple - just turn on your TV and pick a channel. Nowadays, while we have access to a broader range of movies and shows than ever before, the experience has become complicated due to the numerous expensive services needed to watch even a single show. Fortunately, there are also plenty of free streaming sites that offer 100% legitimate content, both in terms of movies and TV series. However, it's worth noting that not all these options are available worldwide. If you're outside your home country and want access to the free movies or shows you're used to, a VPN can be a useful tool. The choice of which streaming site to use often depends on where you live - for instance, Americans might prefer Peacock over BBC iPlayer. However, if you're abroad and try to access sites from your home country, you'll find them blocked. One quick fix is using a streaming VPN. This allows you to select a server in any country you choose, connect to it, and then start watching whatever content you desire. ExpressVPN stands out for its excellent streaming performance and wide range of locations, making it ideal for accessing the free streaming sites listed below. So, if you're outside the US and want to watch Peacock, for example, all you need to do is connect to a US VPN server and then head over to the site. Below are some of the best free streaming sites available:

- BBC iPlayer: With its extensive library of BBC content and constantly changing catalogues of both classic and modern movies, it offers a wide range of choices for whatever mood you're in. It includes series like "I May Destroy You" and "The Terror," along with live streams of the terrestrial BBC channels.
- Peacock: Launched by NBC in 2020, Peacock is another top choice for free streaming. It features an impressive library of content, including TV series and movies from various studios and networks. The platform offers a range of choices for viewers across different countries and demographics.
- Other Options: There are plenty of other options available as well, each offering something unique to cater to different tastes and preferences. Tubi offers a free streaming service that doesn't require sign-up, while Sling TV provides a competitive free tier with live news streams. By a lesser-known free streaming service Crackle, you'll find plenty of good free movies and TV shows. It's got some big-name flicks like The Hurt Locker and The Grudge, but also some not-so-serious stuff like Big Ass Spider! The selection is kinda hit or miss, but it's worth looking around to see what's on offer. In the US, Canada, and parts of Latin America, Crackle has a pretty good reach. However, if you're in Europe or somewhere else outside the Americas, you'll need to get your VPN ready. Watch32 used to be super popular for letting users watch movies and TV shows in HD without needing to register or pay anything. With its huge library and easy-to-use interface, it was a go-to spot for classic films and new releases alike. However, over the years, Watch32 has had some tough times with legal issues and having to change domains quite often. This sometimes led to temporary shutdowns or mirror sites popping up. Despite all that drama, Watch32 keeps on going and still provides quality content to its users. Watch32 provides a top-notch streaming experience with HD quality and swift loading times, featuring minimal buffering for seamless playback. Its ad-free policy ensures uninterrupted viewing, making it an ideal choice for those seeking a distraction-free entertainment option. Compatible with multiple devices, including desktops, laptops, tablets, and smartphones, Watch32 is accessible on-the-go. If satisfied with the service, users can promote Watch32 by sharing it with others, posting positive experiences online, or sharing their favorite content on social media platforms.
