Medicine in the Malay Archipelago

21 June – 4 July 2026

Borneo – Singapore – Sulawesi – Java

ACTIVE

Borobudur

The snake-like Malay Archipelago is the world's largest collection of geologically active islands and is home to a diverse mix of cultures and extraordinary biodiversity. Located at the crossroads of global trade, Malaysia and Indonesia have long been a vital hub in the Southeast Asian spice route. Their medical heritage blends ancient belief with modern healthcare.

Begin in the dense rainforests of Sarawak, Borneo, and discover the colonial past of Kuching, perched languidly on the river. Visit longhouse communities and travel to a Bidayuh village to meet local healers and discover how traditional healing is deeply rooted in cultural beliefs, customs, and ancestral history. Learn how medicine is delivered to remote areas within the vast expanse of Borneo before continuing to the vibrant cultural landscape of Singapore, where you will learn how urban planning intertwines with public health.

Visit lesser trodden Indonesia, starting in northern Sulawesi, where you will explore the primeval beauty of Tangkoko National Park, the last refuge of some of the planet's oddest creatures. Learn from healthcare workers at a local clinic before unwinding in the stunning Bunaken Marine Reserve with the opportunity to explore spectacular underwater scenery.

Fly to Java, where Javanese herbal medicine (jamu) remains an integral part of community life. See dawn break over Mount Bromo and meet with healers and herbalists at a rural education centre. Explore the palaces of Yogyakarta and learn how it became a hotbed of revolutionary idealism in the 1940s. Finish at the spectacular temple complexes of Prambanan and mighty Borobudur; the largest Buddhist temple in the world.

since 2005.
