North and South Japan Hokkaido and Kyushu 4 – 16 October 2026

Level 4
ACTIVE

Lake Toya, Hokkaido

The four main islands of Japan – Hokkaido, Honshu, Shikoku, and Kyushu – encompass enormous diversity in geography, culture and food. This diversity is at its richest between the thickly forested expanses of Hokkaido and the volcanic, subtropical island of Kyushu. If Japan was overlaid on Europe, Hokkaido would be in Scandinavia, with an almost Russian feel, while Kyushu would overlay Portugal.

Hokkaido is the Japan of wide-open spaces, with 20% of the country's land area but only 5% of its population. It is famous for its forests, bears, tropical-blue caldera lakes, fields of alpine wildflowers, delicious seafood and the indigenous culture of Japan's first people, the Ainu, who are still present in Hokkaido.

Kyushu is the southernmost of Japan's four main island, renowned for its tonkotsu ramen, natural hot springs and peaceful beaches, dramatic mountains and volcanic terrain, with cultural influences from China and Korea that arrived via the Korean Peninsula.

Travel in autumn, when Hokkaido's leaves will be turning vivid hues, and Kyushu will still be experiencing warmer days and evenings. Learn about the rich history and distinctive local cuisines of both islands in the company of Japan expert, Jason James.

THIS TOUR IS CLASSED AS:

Kagoshima and Sakurajima

Kagoshima is Kyushu's southernmost major city and the capital of Kagoshima Prefecture. Twinned with an Italian sister, Naples, the two cities share a mild climate, a lovely bay, palm tree-lined streets, and a nearby rumbling volcano. Just 15 minutes away by ferry, Mount Sakurajima is Kagoshima's Vesuvius.

Life in Sakurajima's shadow can be idyllic, with mango trees lining the seaside promenade and naturally heated footbaths, where people can take a break to soak their feet. Volcanic activity has created dramatic landscapes, with lush greenery, volcanic craters, and stunning views of the surrounding coastline. As well as its hot springs, Sakurajima also boasts the world's biggest radish, its smallest mandarin and uniquely coloured pottery, made using volcanic ash.

You can also spend the day in Kagoshima, which has the largest shopping district in south Kyushu (Tenmonkan, located downtown Kagoshima City) and much to offer in terms of food, including satsuma-age (deep-fried fish cake) and the "black trio" of wagyu beef, Berkshire pork, and Satsuma jidori chicken - the name is derived from the black colors of the animals used to make the dishes. Wagyu beef from Kagoshima is said to be the best in Japan.

Living in the volcano's shadow

Japan's most active volcano erupts hundreds of times a year. These regular eruptions are part of everyday life for people in Kagoshima, who use umbrellas on ash days and learn not to leave their clothes out at certain times of the year.

Sakurajima is very closely monitored with constant updates. Daily routines include children wearing helmets on the way to and from school to protect heads from volcanic debris, packing volcanic ash falling around houses into official "ash bags" for collection, and evacuation plans to designated shelters set up around the area in emergencies.
