Littlest pet shop value guide

By Chiyo Introduction So you're wondering what your Littlest Pet Shops are worth? With over 3000 LPS to sift through, it can seem overwhelming to find their monetary values. Here's some foundational information to help you better understand the value of LPS. LPS value doesn't come from magnet color or age. Magnet colors don't determine rarity; red magnets are just a sign of older pets. For example, the Sparkle Husky (#2297) without a magnet goes for $60.00 on average. The actual worth comes from other factors. What gives LPS their value? Two defining factors: demand and production value. High demand greatly increases an LPS's monetary value. This is evident in the infamous Savvy Reed (#675), which has a high production value without factoring rarity. High demand does not necessarily mean a pet is rare or valuable. In fact, the main five pets in Littlest Pet Shop, including Dachsunds and Shorthair Cats, are generally common due to high demand. This increased demand causes sellers to raise prices, making them more attractive to buyers who want to own these popular pets. The value of a pet is determined by its production value, which refers to the amount produced and what it is made of. For example, if every pencil in existence was destroyed except for one, that last pencil would be extremely valuable due to its rarity. In Littlest Pet Shop, the rareness of pets like #410 Shorthair Cat is often a combination of high demand and production value. There are currently four generations of Littlest Pet Shop, each with distinct style changes. Generation 1 pets were produced in the 1990s, Generation 2 from 2004 to 2012, Generation 3 had a short run from 2011 to 2013, and Generation 4 started in 2014. You can find them on Toysisters or also here: As a single stay-at-home mom, I've been able to support my family by reselling things that are worth good money. One of the most profitable items to sell on eBay is old and rare Littlest Pet Shops (LPS). Keep reading for the rare LPS list below. Before I started blogging, I was one of the top sellers of LPS stuff on eBay. I made the most money out of all my competitors for each pet sold. It's not uncommon for you to be able to get $50-$200 for ONE Littlest Pet Shop toy. These little 2" toys are very valuable and most people don't know it! Rare Littlest Pet Shop List The most expensive pet by far is the Comic Con Cat. I've sold this one several times over, making money on eBay selling these for hundreds of dollars. The asking price was $950! While it doesn't tell us the actual sold price, it's super duper expensive. All the Comic Cons do really well. There's a Comic Con Cat and a Comic Con Hippo. They don't have to be new in the box either; pre-owned can work for good money too! Why LPS Toys Sell for So Much Money The answer is that Hasbro only releases so many of one particular pet. There are well over 3,000 different Littlest Pets now as of 2019 and that number grows almost daily. After they're gone in the stores, they're gone; there's no guarantee you can find the one you want. Littlest Pet Shop toys release different ones to different parts of the states. In fact, there are a few rarer ones that have only been released in the U.K., making them even harder to find. My Littlest Pet Shops Are Highly Sought After Kids and adults collect them; they have parties with them. They play with them day and night; they bring them to school. LPS life is very much a hot topic in the kid world. Anyone who's anyone has them. Okay, so they're popular, but aren't they just a fad? No! LPS have been around since the 90s! They've been popular for a really long time and I don't foresee them ever losing momentum. Hasbro is constantly coming out with new ideas. Glow in the dark pets, Blythe dolls, TV shows, teeniest tiniest pets… on the saving money standpoint, this is something to invest your hard-earned money in. Kids play with these toys from the time they're around 2 years old to 12 years old. Once kids start hitting the teen years, they usually drop off; but most kids will play with these toys for a very long time. Many more kids (and adults) collect them. Our favorite thing to do with LPS is dress them up. You can make a killing selling LPS clothes on eBay. When I sold them, I made about $24.95 for each set of around 7 pieces. At one point, I was making that much from just this one product alone! Given article text here is about making money from Littlest Pet Shop (LPS) toys by buying them second-hand at low prices, such as on Amazon or eBay, and then reselling them for a profit. The key to success lies in finding unique items, like plants or cleaning supplies, that can be included with the pets to make them stand out in crowded listings. LPS generation 1 sets and vintage pets are also valuable to collectors and can fetch high prices. Now at around $50, Dragons are highly sought after for resale due to their popularity. Cruise Ship and Jet models also perform well on eBay, with the latter often selling for over $100. In my experience, breaking down items like wings or seats into separate listings can significantly increase earnings. For instance, a wing can fetch between $15-$30, depending on the seller's timing. Many collectors seek these to complete their sets, making them valuable for resale. By parting out your set, you can make more money and save on shipping costs. Moreover, this approach helps improve reviews, which is crucial for selling on eBay. Inchworms/Caterpillars and LPS pets are also in high demand. The original mini baby ones can fetch around $15. Rare dogs like Great Danes, Cocker Spaniels, Dachshunds, and Collies command a premium price on eBay. Knowing the rarest LPS pets can help you identify valuable items. When selling LPS pets, it's essential to scrutinize even the smallest details. For example, certain Great Dane variations have distinct pupil shapes in their eyes, with one being circle-shaped and the other starred. These differences can significantly impact the pet's value. For selling LPS on eBay or your own Shopify store, I recommend using the platform that offers free shipping, such as eBay. This strategy has proven to increase sales and profitability. When shipping, use a small bubble envelope, wrap the pet in organza bag, and attach it to a tiny bubble mailer (less than 3 oz) to minimize costs. To set prices for LPS pet characters, consider your feedback rate and business goals. If you have excellent feedback and many sales, you can charge more than other sellers. Conversely, if you want to sell quickly or establish yourself, start with lower prices. Are Littlest Pet Shop (LPS) Discontinued? Here's What You Need To Know Waiting for a sale can be a gamble, as listing fees are relatively low and may make it worth waiting for a higher price. The LPS show ended after four seasons in 2016, but you can still watch the episodes for free on Tubi. Fortunately, the actual figurines are still being produced, and there's even a new Roblox game based on the franchise. If you're looking to sell your LPS, here are some tips: * You can find over 40 things to sell on eBay to make money. * To avoid scams, learn how to spot genuine pets from fake ones. * Popular pets like dogs and cats tend to be more valuable due to their limited edition status. * Blythe dolls are also highly collectible and rare, with prices increasing over time. Some key characteristics that can make certain LPS rare include: * Teal blue eyes * Green and brown eyes * Purple and orange eyes * Magnets underneath the pet (older magnets mean older pets) * Unique eyeshape designs Ultimately, the value of an LPS is determined by its sentimental attachment, not just monetary worth. The value of a Littlest Pet Shops collection lies not in its rarity or age, but in the memories and experiences attached to it. To trust this information, Chiyo Tadashi, a seasoned collector, shares her expertise. With 16 years of collecting under her belt, she has developed a comprehensive database of LPS history and details. Misconceptions about LPS value are common. Some believe that magnet color determines rarity, while others think age or eye markings increase worth. However, Chiyo explains that these factors have no bearing on the value of an LPS. Instead, demand plays a crucial role in determining its worth. High demand can significantly increase the monetary value of a pet, as seen in the case of #675, the Savvy Reed dog. In economics, high demand drives up prices due to increased purchasing power and seller greed. This phenomenon is evident in the average price of LPS pets, which often exceeds $90.00 for popular breeds like Dachsunds, Cocker Spaniels, and Great Danes. By understanding what contributes to an LPS's value, collectors can make informed decisions about their collections and appreciate the true worth of these small, plastic pets. Bon Bon Cats, Puppies, and Kittens. Keep in mind that casual collectors usually prioritize cats and dogs over other pets, making their prices tend to be higher. As a result, traders are more likely to swap a cat for another cat or a dog for another dog. Rarity is also determined by production value, which refers to the quantity of an item produced along with its quality. A clear example is the pencil scarcity scenario: if only one pencil remains out of millions, it would be extremely valuable due to its rarity. Similarly, the genuine rarity of LPS is often unknown to casual collectors since they focus on acquiring the "Main 5" pets, which are in high demand. This situation could also apply to a specific pet like #410 Shorthair Cat, which has both high demand and production value.
