A long-buried chapter in Canadian history is slowly being uncovered in Ontario's Priceville, where a lost colony of early black Loyalists once thrived. The Old Durham Road Pioneer Cemetery, hidden beneath a potato field, has been restored, revealing the graves of these pioneers. However, this newfound knowledge has created division within the community as some residents fear that uncovering the truth about their ancestors might reveal uncomfortable secrets. The documentary film "Speakers for the Dead" delves into the lesser-known history of a Canadian community. It won several prestigious awards, including Best Documentary at the Reel Black Awards in 2000. As part of its Reel Diversity Competition, it provided an opportunity for emerging black filmmakers to direct their own projects, produced by the National Film Board of Canada.
