Teaching La Calaca Alegre in Spanish class is wrapping up with chapters 6-10 being covered next. For my Spanish 4 students, finishing the year means reading the novel La Calaca Alegre by Carrie Toth. I reflected on last year's experience teaching the novel and realized that I had been winging it without a solid plan. The students thoroughly enjoyed the lessons that came from the teacher's guide. They loved exploring the prop box and participated in a food slide show to learn about Mexican cuisine. Students read through chapter materials on their own before discussing it with the class, where they also retold the story of Angelica's disappearance using word clouds. The class worked together to complete informal quizzes to assess their understanding, but some students preferred to take turns reading aloud while others chose to do so individually. The students were given the option to choose between a Chapter 5 quizlet or Kahoot review session. A lesson on the mural "Gulliver" by Hector Duarte was followed up with a viewing of his interview, which had accompanying transcript and comprehension questions. In another part of the day, students read through the Pilsen slideshow's murals.
