Archives by Artists

Jim Drobnick and Jennifer Fisher

While the writing about the “archival turn” often covers artistic engagement with the archive in installations, books, performance and video, the medium of multiples has been generally overlooked.¹ Archives by Artists explores this gap to study how multiples embody a particularly apt vehicle through which to interrogate and mobilize conceptions of the archive. Each archive-multiple incorporates an assortment of items contained in a box or envelope. Small enough to circulate by post, they can travel to far-flung locations to be contemplated and collected. Because the contents can be handled, archive-multiples highlight the experience of embodied knowledge. Likewise, because they can be easily rearranged, they circumvent tendencies toward static placement. Rather than prescribing a linear relationship between the elements (as in a bound book or film), archive-multiples consist of diverse, yet related parts that can yield myriad configurations. Similar to delving into an actual archive, one encounters a heterogeneity of texts, images and objects in a process of negotiating associations between items. This activity of sorting through components endows the viewer with an intimate agency and invites them to perform as a researcher or the artist’s collaborator.

The works in Archives by Artists derive from the artists’ books and multiples held in the research collection DisplayCult has assembled as a resource for academic and curatorial investigations.² Each of the artists’ multiples presented in the exhibition at Galerie UQO constitutes a miniature archive. Most of these archive-multiples contain items typically found in an archive, such as photographs, postcards, books, letters, maps or news clippings, but also uncommon items such as perfumes and found objects. The wide-ranging projects illuminate each artists’ oeuvre and practice, reflect upon their community and social networks, revisit historical events, consider timely themes about memory and preservation, as well as question the nature and dynamics of the archive form itself. On a curatorial level, Archives by Artists poses an inquiry into how the archive-multiple operates as a creative medium and a capacious platform for reflection, expression and analysis.

Artists’ multiples address the idea of the archive but can do so in markedly different ways. Some interrogate the archive as a communication medium, while others deploy it as a mode of critique. While several artists use the archive medium as a natural extension of their practice, others appropriate it for a strategic purpose. The archive-multiple thus affords a range of tactics for creative investigation not only for visual artists, but also for the poets, performance artists, dancers, musicians and filmmakers in the show. As curators, we discerned six constellatory modes implemented in the works: autobiography/biography, conceptual process, intervention, fiction, art world controversies and unconventional archives. (Some of the works, however, could fit into several themes simultaneously, which shows the abundant and multifaceted potential of artists' archive-multiples.)³

The first mode, autobiography and biography, involves works that include materials that hint at revelations about a person's or artists' life. The constructivist artist Alexander Rodchenko famously proposed that to truly convey the fullness of an individual, one would have to produce not a single portrait image but a compilation of snapshots and documents in a folder.⁴ The works of Christian Boltanski, Vilma Samulionytė and Danh Võ align with this sensibility by amassing photos, ephemera, books and letters to pose the difficulty of reconstructing a singular or authentic sense of a person. In these investigations, the archive and its collection of fragments serve to examine elusive lives and careers, as well as to question the philosophical and political nature of selfhood and identity.

Other artists claim the archive format to disclose their conceptual process. For Dora García, Joseph Kosuth, Lefevre Jean Claude and Dieter Roth, the practices involved in artmaking - which normally remain in the background - are brought to the foreground. As mundane as some of the clippings and rough drafts may seem, they become invested with aesthetic significance by revealing clues about the artists' working methods and thought processes. Here, the artworks emphasize the extensive preparatory activities undertaken by artists in the studio. These multiples comprise archives of notebooks, academic articles and other source materials to disclose the in-depth research, intellectual labor, pivotal decision-making and evolution of ideas that go into a project's realization.

Another approach concerns interventions into the archive. The framing imposed by archives can make them seem monolithic and authoritative. But as Stuart Hall theorizes, the act of archiving bears an agency that is "always a critical one, always a historically located one, always a contestatory one."⁵ The archive-multiples by Aiden Bettine, Amanda Chestnut, Carlos Soto Román, and Camille Turner & Yaniya Lee directly intervene into public history to subvert the archive's presumed power and to enact a counter-discourse. They confront the biases that can permeate governmental and institutional archives, particularly regarding the marginalizing and censoring of information about politicized and racialized subjects. These works uncover the discrimination found in historical collections, identify and analyze prejudicial representations, or rectify gaps with more inclusive archives.

Artists have also introduced fiction as a technique to comment on the archive. The works of Ioannis Anastasiou & Majka Dokudowicz, Ilya Kabakov and the collaborative publication by Kiran Kumar, Kiwi Menrath and Laurie Young feature the interplay between fiction and reality to immerse visitors in other times and worlds, propel them on journeys that exercise the imagination, or compel them to question the reliability of evidence. Employing forms of critical fabulation, where historical and invented materials blur into each other, narratives both plausible and impossible intermix.⁶ In these archive-multiples, the assumption of facts and truth are destabilized through storytelling, deliberate contradictions, and the performance of memory.

Another consequential theme pertains to art world controversies. Artists take special note when the media sensationalizes and distorts debates on art, such as those involving copyright or public backlash to vanguard practices. Four archive-multiples interrogate art events that have garnered tabloid attention or affected the viability of artists' careers. Controversies are met with varying responses: Joseph Beuys uses the crisis as a reflective opportunity, William N. Copley reacts with a further provocation, Charlotte Moorman advocates for payment from a delinquent funder, and Sophie Nys depicts how cultural disapproval can shift into admiration. Drawing content from newspapers, popular sources or their own practice, these archival works follow and contextualize the controversies and even seek to influence the ensuing discussion and outcomes.

Finally, artists have challenged and expanded upon normative conceptions by formulating unconventional archives. These projects redefine the archive, the nature of its materials, or its manner of engagement. As theorists critique the limitations of textual documents and photographs, institutions now recognize the value of seeking out and including non-traditional items and intangible forms of culture.⁷ Nick Cave & Bob Faust, Tammy Nguyen, Jürgen O. Olbrich and Vicky Sabourin each bring together unusual collections of items: party gear, puzzling knickknacks, cast-off papers, custom-made scents. Along with their multisensory scope, these multiples evoke affects not expected to be found in an archive, encompass a broad spectrum of emotions, and encourage playful participation.

Beyond the vitrines in the exhibition, the multiples can be experienced through film, sound, installation and touch. Two films, one by Nick Cave and another by Carlos Soto Román (collaborating with Camila Estrella and Bárbara Oettinger), accompany their respective multiples and add performative and sonic dimensions. Jürgen O. Olbrich's installation offers visitors the chance to take away a free PaperPolice package to add to their own archive and collection. Visitors also have the chance to peruse the films and audio interviews contained in Dora García's multiple, as well as to handle and study a rotating selection of works from the exhibition at a research station situated inside the gallery. Concurrently with the show, Mathieu Mercier's reinterpretation of Marcel Duchamp's Boîte-en-valise, an influential precedent for artists' multiples and archive-based works, is on display in the Université du Québec en Outaouais library on the second floor.⁸

Archives by Artists brings together an international array of artworks from the 1960s to today that explore the subject of the archive and imaginatively reconceive its potential. The archive-multiple is presented as a platform to experiment with methods of documentation, collection and preservation, and to test alternatives and launch critiques. The works in this exhibition align with the ongoing discussion in public and institutional archives that respond to issues pertaining to decolonization and inclusion. The artists' archives here become vital sites for tracking transformations in history and cultural heritage. In the space of this exhibition, the works deploy the look and feel of the archive to underscore artists' agency as both researchers and creators, where the centrifugal function of storing and the centripetal force of multiples meet in constructive tension as artists adopt an archivist standpoint.

Artists biographies

Ioannis Anastasiou was born in Athens, Greece and lives and works in Wrocław, Poland. He has a PhD in Art from the E. Geppert Academy of Art and Design, where he also works as a printmaking technician. He uses various printmaking techniques to create 3-D objects, installations, artists' books and prints that explore social and political issues. He has won many awards and exhibited his work in over 100 international events. His works are in several museum collections. He has also participated in conferences, symposiums, workshops, publications and journals. He is involved in PrintCard Wrocław, Zine Without a Crown, and Misprint Studio (Wrocław, Pologne).

Aiden Bettine is the Curator of the Tretter Collection in GLBT Studies at the University of Minnesota Libraries Archives and Special Collections. He is an archivist and public historian who researches and teaches local history pertaining to race, gender and sexuality in the Midwest, with a focus on the role of building community archives in the grassroots history movement that flourished as a form of activism in Gay Liberation. Aiden's community work prioritizes creating generative spaces for LGBTQ people to learn, share and research their history. He co-runs Late Night Copies Press, an independent micro press in Minneapolis that publishes non-fiction and informal research-based writing with an emphasis on local queer and trans history and queer artists through zine and pamphlet formats. He founded the LGBTQ Iowa Archives & Library, a community archives and lending library in Iowa City.

Joseph Beuys worked across diverse media such as performance, installation, film and video, sound and multiples. His expanded definition of art included pedagogy with his founding of the Free International University, politics with the founding of the German Green Party, and society itself as a "social sculpture." His work is represented in museums worldwide. Recent exhibitions have occurred at Museo Nacional Centro de Arte Reina Sofia (Madrid), Centre Pompidou (Paris), Tate Modern (London), National Gallery of Victoria (Melbourne), Hamburger Bahnhof (Berlin) and the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art (Edinburgh). In honor of the 100th anniversary of the artist's birth, a series of exhibitions, performances, and lectures were staged in 2021. Beuys' estate is managed by Gallery Thaddaeus Ropac, London.

Christian Boltanski was born in Paris during World War II and was deeply influenced by stories of the Holocaust. A self-taught artist, he developed a conceptual style of work in the late 1960s. Since his first solo exhibition in Paris in 1968, his oeuvre has been widely shown internationally. In 1988-1989, Christian Boltanski: Lessons of Darkness was his first in-depth exhibition in the United States, co-organized by Museum of Contemporary Art (MCA) (Chicago) and The New Museum of Contemporary Art (New York). Recent solo shows have been held at Busan Museum of Art (Korea, 2021), Centre Pompidou (Paris, 2019) and the National Art Center (Tokyo, 2019). Boltanski was honored with several awards during his lifetime, including the Praemium Imperiale Award (2006) and the Kaiser Ring Award (2001). He participated in documenta (Kassel) (1977 and 1972) and numerous Venice Biennales (2015, 1995, 1993, 1980 and 1975). He is represented by the Marian Goodman Gallery.

Nick Cave lives and works in Chicago. He is an artist, educator and foremost a messenger, working between the visual and performing arts through a wide range of mediums including sculpture, installation, video, sound and performance. Cave is well known for his Soundsuits, sculptural forms based on the scale of his body, initially created in direct response to the police beating of Rodney King in 1991. Soundsuits camouflage the body, masking and creating a second skin that conceals race, gender and class, forcing the viewer to look without judgment. They serve as a visual embodiment of social justice that represent both brutality and empowerment. Cave and Bob Faust are both professional and personal partners. Together, the two recently opened a dynamic, multi-use, not-for-profit, creative space in Chicago called Facility.

Amanda Chestnut lives in Rochester, NY and focuses on the representation of history - in particular, how the history of race and gender impacts modern narratives.

Their work has been exhibited in Rochester at Firehouse Gallery, Joe Brown Gallery, the University of Rochester, and High Falls Art Gallery at the Center at High Falls. They were formerly a resident at the Center for Photography at Woodstock and The Studios of Key West, Florida. Chestnut holds an MFA from the Visual Studies Workshop, Rochester, NY.

William N. Copley was an artist, writer, art dealer, collector and publisher of the S.M.S. portfolios. In 2016, a comprehensive survey of Copley's work opened at the Menil Collection (Houston, Texas) and traveled to the Fondazione Prada (Venice). Copley's work is held in major collections, including the Centre Pompidou (Paris), the Moderna Museet (Stockholm), the Museum of Modern Art (New York), the Stedelijk Museum (Amsterdam) and the Tate Britain, among others.

Majka Dokudowicz was born in Warsaw, Poland and is a PhD candidate in printmaking at the E. Geppert Academy of Fine Art and Design in Wrocław, where she earned her MA in Printmaking. She holds a BA in Culture Studies. She is a printmaker, bookbinder and papermaker. Her works and research investigate the Metaxy space, where one is between two poles of existence: fragments, understatements, memories, traces, obliterations, and excerpts. She examines the phenomenon of appearance through disappearance, which she considers the most unforeseen and extraordinary force. She has attended residencies in Germany, Spain and the USA. She has won prizes and awards at international competitions such as: 2nd Prize at the 12th International Biennale of Miniature Art in Czestochowa (Poland), Prize of Excellence at the 8th NBC MESHTECH International Screen Print Biennial (Tokyo) and 2nd Prize in experimental printmaking at Mini Print Kazanlak (Bulgaria). She has exhibited in more than 200 shows worldwide.

Camila Estrella lives and works in Santiago, where she teaches at the University of Chile. She is interested in photography, collage and cultural politics. She currently directs the research project "R.O.C.I.: derivations of Robert Rauschenberg's visit to Chile," in addition to collaborating with artists and writers. She has exhibited at the Fogenia Festival (Mexico City), the Centro Cultural de España (Santiago) and the Museo de Arte Contemporáneo (Santiago).

Bob Faust lives and works in Chicago. He is both an artist and designer. By drawing upon the language and tools of the design world and capitalizing on his expertise as a typographer as well as his 30+ year career as principal and creative director for Faust, a cultural branding studio. Faust makes special projects born in the space between art and design. He believes these are the two most powerful tools for social change and adeptly employs both to "make work that works hard." As a conceptual artist, his practice is difficult to categorize as it crosses genres, mediums, scales and purposes, to ensure the project's role is the primary driver of all creative decisions. Nick Cave and Faust are both professional and personal partners. Together, the two recently opened a dynamic, multi-use, not-for-profit, creative space in Chicago called Facility.

Dora Garcia has developed works on the GDR political police (the film Rooms, Conversations, 24', 2006, first presented at GfZK, Leipzig), on the comedian Lenny Bruce (Just because everything is different... Lenny Bruce in Sydney, one-time performance, Sydney Biennale, 2008) or on the rhizomatic associations of antipsychiatry (Mad Marginal, book series since 2010), and The Deviant Majority, film, 34', 2010, part of her performance project The Inadequate, first presented at the Spanish Pavilion, 54th Venice Biennale). She has used classical TV formats to research Germany's most recent history (Die Klau Mich Show, documenta13, Kassel, 2012), frequented Finnegans Wake reading groups (The Joycean Society, 53', 2013), created meeting points for voice hearers (The Hearing Voices Café, since 2014) and researched the crossover between performance and psychoanalysis (The Sinthome Score, 2013, and Segunda Vez, 2018). She is currently working on the film project Amor Rojo, on Marxist feminist Alexandra Kollontai and the impact of her legacy on Third-World, intersectional feminism.

Sophie Nys works with a variety of media and materials, and brings conceptual and minimalistic artistic strategies to their logical and formal limits, while maintaining their poetic eloquence as subjects derived from the everyday. Dieter Roth produced books, graphics, drawings, paintings, sculptures, assemblages, installations and media works involving slides, sound recordings, film and video. He also worked as a composer, poet, writer and musician. He often collaborated with other artists, subverting the principle of authorship. Those partners included such figures as Richard Hamilton, Emmett Williams, Arnulf Rainer and Hermann Nitsch, as well as a long and symbiotic collaboration with his son, artist Björn Roth. Roth was restlessly peripatetic, moving between studios in many cities often outside of the mainstream, such as Iceland and Basel. Transience and order, destruction and creativity, playful humour and critical inquiry, the abject and the beautiful, all maintain a balance in his work. Roth represented Switzerland at the 1982 Venice Biennale, and received a number of awards and prizes, including the 1991 Genevan Prix Caran d'Ache Beaux Arts. In 2004, The Museum of Modern Art and P.S.1 Contemporary Art Center in New York jointly presented a major retrospective, co-organized with Schaulager Basel and the Museum Ludwig (Köln, Germany).
