Dear Secretary of State,

I am a pupil at [insert school name here] Primary School, and I'm writing to you because I care about the future of our planet. I think it is very important for children to learn about climate change and nature. Almost all children want this – 9 out of 10 students say it is important to learn about climate change. Many of us also want to know what we can do to help stop it.

We want to learn these things now, in primary school, not just when we get to secondary school. If we start younger, we can make better choices and help look after the planet sooner.

We also need more chances to spend time in nature. Children who get to go outside to places like parks, rivers, and woodlands feel more hopeful and are more likely to want to learn more about climate change. Nature makes us feel connected and helps us understand why protecting our world matters.

We are asking you to make sure that:

1. Climate change education begins in primary schools.
2. All children get more access to nature as part of their learning.

We want schools to help us prepare for the future and to set a good example for our communities. Please listen to us – we are ready to learn and ready to help.

Yours sincerely,
