Submitting Media Articles

What are Media Articles?

A media article is a written piece of content published or intended for publication through a media outlet, digital publication, organisational platform, blog or other communication channel. It communicates information, shares perspectives, reports on developments or explores issues of public interest. For Africa Evidence Week 2026, we are interested in media articles that highlight the role of evidence in shaping conversations, informing decisions, influencing policy and driving change across Africa. These do not have to be academic articles or research papers. We want accessible, engaging stories that connect evidence to real-world issues, people, experiences and decisions.

Media Articles for Africa Evidence Week 2026

The Africa Evidence Network (AEN) aims to advocate for, connect with and learn from all members of the African evidence ecosystem, recognising the importance of communication in strengthening evidence-informed decision-making. The media plays an important role in connecting evidence to the people, conversations and decisions that shape Africa's future. Through journalism, storytelling, commentary and public discourse, evidence can move beyond research institutions and reach communities, policymakers and wider audiences.

What your media article will need

- Author details: name, surname, role and organisation.
- A photo of each author.
- A free-to-use image to represent your article.
- Your core message: an indication of what it is.
- Social media handles for all authors and organisations involved, where possible.
- Length: provide a link to images, articles.
- Language: French or English.

How to submit

Submit your blog post through our online submission process, and our programme officer will contact you to discuss how to proceed.

The AEN reserves the right not to publish a submitted article that does not align with the parameters of the Week.
