Publishing a Blog Post

What is a blog post?

A blog post is an article, news piece or guide published in the blog section of a website. An author or group of authors prepares the post and submits it to an organisation for publication. The organisation reviews it to consider whether it will interest its audience. If the post is accepted, the organisation's editors may suggest changes to make it suit their platform. Once the authors have made those changes, the post is published on the organisation's blog, often alongside a suitable image.

Blog posts for Africa Evidence Week 2026

The Africa Evidence Network (AEN) aims to advocate for, connect with and learn from all members of the African evidence ecosystem, and our blog platform is one way to do this. During Africa Evidence Week 2026, we welcome posts on any facet of the evidence ecosystem, especially those that showcase Africa's expertise, innovation and decision-makers' efforts in evidence-informed decision-making (EIDM).

What your blog post will need

- Author details: name, surname, role and organisation.
- A photo of each author.
- A free-to-use image to represent your blog post.
- Your core message: an indication of what it is.
- Social media handles for all authors and organisations involved, where possible.
- Length: between 800 and 1,000 words.
- Language: French or English.

How to submit

Submit your blog post through our online submission process, and our programme officer will contact you to discuss how to proceed. To see examples, browse the AEN blog platform.

We accept previously published blog posts, but Africa Evidence Week 2026 hopes to attract posts featuring new work. The AEN reserves the right not to publish a submitted post that does not align with the parameters of the Week.
