CLASSICAL CORNER

Excerpts from a classical Christian education and military service article by Chip Crane

I'll argue that a classical Christian education is an excellent way to prepare young men and women for service in the military—as indeed it is for all walks of life. They learn that one age responds to and bears the fruit (good or bad) of the one before it—helping them understand the why of a present conflict or strategic direction. Understanding mankind—knowing that God has made people in His image and imbued them with a dignity far beyond what our Constitution recognizes, and knowing that we have a military because we are fallen—is a starting point to truly serve and lead. A second priceless preparation for military service lies in the communication training. In the right hands, a classical Christian education can cultivate the wisdom and love so vital to success in our sailors, fighters, flyers, and defenders.

Chip Crane, Ph.D, is a retired Navy Supply Corps officer and principal lecturer in the English Department at the University of Maryland.
