The Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC) has released its 2025 football schedule, which will feature a mix of traditional rivalries and new matchups. The conference has opted to maintain an eight-game in-conference schedule for the upcoming season, unlike some other Power Five conferences that have expanded their schedules. The decision to stick with an eight-game schedule was reportedly influenced by concerns about cross-country travel adding to the already significant workload of student-athletes. To mitigate this, the ACC has ensured that each of its 14 member schools will play in California no more than three times over a seven-season period. The new scheduling model also includes 16 annual matchups, with 11 of those games already confirmed under the previous 3-5-5 format. The schedule release is the second season under this new model, and it promises to feature a record number of league games on Friday nights. The ACC Football event is scheduled for five days over Labor Day Weekend, featuring crucial conference games and the most demanding non-conference schedule in the country. The season concludes with the championship game on December 6th at Bank of America Stadium in Charlotte, North Carolina. (Added spelling errors method SE - 40% probability)
