Children can color their preferred page and then learn how to wrap gifts. If they open them carefully, they'll receive some handmade art as a keepsake. To create dioramas, children can cut objects from coloring pages and glue them into shoe boxes. They need two sheets of the same page - one for background and one for foreground objects. Once glued in, children cut out objects, leaving a small piece of paper underneath each object to fold back and create a stand. After that, they glue stands into the shoe box and voilà - a diorama is complete. My kids' coloring pages feature various animals, plants, and food, with some suitable for bookmarks. Children can color their preferred bookmark page, cut it out, and then laminate it to make it durable. They can also decorate handles or tray ridges using puffy paints or acrylics. For a birthday party, children can color animal faces on pages large enough to cover kid's faces. Then, they carefully cut them out, leaving space around the outline, and punch holes for string or yarn. Alternatively, they can turn standard serving trays into custom trays with their favorite objects by coloring in preferred illustrations, Mod Podge onto the tray, and adding puffy paints or acrylics. Let children pick from our kids' coloring pages and shade them in, then glue or use Mod Podge to affix the illustrations to inexpensive journals or notebooks. A DIY keychain or magnet craft can be a thoughtful gift for grandma or kids aged 8-12. To create this project, start by letting them pick a coloring page and printing it onto shrinking paper. They should color in the object they want to turn into a keychain, cut it out, and punch holes for the ring attachments. As an adult, arrange the objects on a pan and bake them until they shrink. Once cooled, have them attach O-rings or other chosen accessories. Another idea is to create magnets using my coloring pages. They can print out their preferred page, laminate it, and then apply hot glue to attach it to a magnet or use Mod Podge on glass stones to create a custom design. For a fun twist, kids can paint ceramic tiles with their designs after applying spray mount. You can also make Christmas tree ornaments by having them color in my provided pages, cut out the main figure, and then laminate and punch holes for a ribbon attachment. To add extra specialness, include their name and date on the back of each ornament. You can make your child's coloring page more special by turning it into gift tags, postcards, or even decorations for a small potted plant. Start by having your child color in the illustration and write a message on the inside. You can also use these pages as gift tags by printing off the illustrations, cutting out the main figure, and having the child add their name and address. To turn the coloring page into postcards, you'll need to shrink it down to size using a computer. Cut the illustration to 4x6 inches and glue it onto a piece of posterboard. Have your child color in the illustration again, then draw lines on the back for the message section and address section. Finally, add a stamp and write the recipient's address. For a craft project, you can use the coloring pages to decorate a small potted plant. Have your child color in their favorite illustration and place it inside the pot. Then, instruct them to pleat the paper as they pull it up around the pot, securing it with a rubber band or glue. You can also turn the coloring pages into puzzles or decorations for gift bags. To make a puzzle, have your child color in the illustrations and then cut out the figures. To decorate a gift bag, have them color in the illustration and paste the whole page - or cutouts - into the bag. You can have kids draw puzzle shapes directly onto a thick black marker on top of their coloring page. For younger children, make the pieces larger, while older ones can work with smaller shapes. Have them cut out the pieces and store them in a plastic bag. This easy craft is perfect for what coloring pages are meant for - creating something new from existing art. Once kids have colored in their chosen illustration, glue it onto a slightly bigger piece of construction paper to create the frame. Next, poke two small holes near the top, thread some string through, and tie off. Voilà! You've got a charming wall decoration that's ready for display - almost museum-quality!
