

Click Here

The washwoman questions and answers printable pdf printable form

The website thinks you're a bot due to your browser's settings. This might be caused by your super-fast browsing speed, disabled cookies, or a third-party plugin blocking JavaScript. Check out this support article for more info. To regain access, make sure cookies and JavaScript are enabled before reloading the page. --- Questions: elementary Wh- questions Questions: intermediate Home Content The Washwoman By Issac Bashevis SingerFirst, Some Reflection... 1. What was "The Washwoman" about? Just decide what the major topic is - work dignity, acceptance of people who are different, generosity, faith, pride, God's love for everyone, persistence, Forgiveness, or loyalty. 2. Think about why you chose that topic. Find passages in the story that make you focus on this idea. Write brief notes explaining your thoughts and check your previous responses. Working Together 3. Discuss with other readers and compare your answers. As you talk, note any differences of opinion and questions to discuss further. Characterization • Character Chart - Characterize the characters listed belowKey Points of the Story This story's about strength and persistence like Lance Armstrong's. The washwoman showed strength by still working hard at her age, loving her son despite his disowning her, and keeping herself alive. Key Points of the Story The washwoman was a Gentile working for a Jewish family among many others; she did her job well in spite of hardships - no faucet, carrying heavy clothes on her back for an hour and a half. Singer mentions the janitor to show Jewish families interacted with Gentiles. Key Points of the Story The washwoman's son was rich but didn't support her. Despite this, she waited outside his wedding, showing strength and unconditional love. Her relationship shows that no matter what, she loved and would always love her son. From The elderly washwoman's struggles and Singer's mother's fears about their own children's behavior were intertwined, yet she still cherished them. The harsh winter had left the washwoman exhausted, but Mrs. Singer showed her kindness by offering food and tea to warm up. Singer described the washwoman's unwavering dedication as a testament to humanity's unrelenting will to work beyond its limits. The washwoman's absence sparked fears of death, leading the family to assume she had passed away. In her stead, Mrs. Singer patched old clothes, only for the washwoman to return and reveal her illness. The community rallied around her, but her strength waned, making her vow to finish her work for a few more families before leaving. Regrettably, she never returned, taking with her a lifetime of unrelenting toil. The story is told from Singer's perspective, providing an intimate look into his experiences and emotions. The narrative hints at the importance of recognizing and valuing hard work, perseverance, and the struggles that shape individuals' lives.