At some point, you've probably struggled to decipher the blurry bottom line on the eye chart at your doctor's office or DMV. This seemingly simple test measures visual acuity by reading a sequence of consonants and vowels. But did you know that the size and arrangement of those block letters are precisely calculated using math to assess detail recognition? Dutch ophthalmologist Herman Snellen developed the first eye chart in 1862, starting with abstract shapes before moving to familiar block letters. He standardized the test so others could replicate it. We're tracing the evolution of this chart and exploring the biology of visual acuity and its testing limits. With Michigan's growing older driver population, we'll examine the state's license renewal rules. There are no special requirements for drivers based on age; instead, the Secretary of State (SOS) accepts concerns about unsafely driving individuals. For in-person renewals, certain health changes or recent online/mailing renewals require SOS visits. No written test is needed at renewal, but a road test may be required if driver impairment is suspected. The SOS can impose restrictions like wearing glasses or corrective lenses, limiting freeway use, or requiring bioptic telescopic lenses for driving. Requests for driver reexaminations can be made to the Michigan Secretary of State (SOS) by medical professionals, law enforcement, family members, friends, or concerned citizens. Confidentiality is maintained to the extent permitted by law, and anonymous tips cannot be accepted. There are two ways to request a review: by writing and signing a letter including the driver's name, birthdate, address, or driver's license number, along with specific reasons for making the report; or by completing a Request for Driver Evaluation form. This form can be mailed to: Michigan Department of State Traffic Safety Division P.O. Box 30810 Lansing, MI 48909 Alternatively, it can be emailed to For information on reinstating a license that has been suspended or revoked in Michigan, refer to the "Revocation Reviews" section. Disability parking placards and license plates can be issued to drivers with impaired mobility if certified by a licensed medical practitioner. The steps required for obtaining a disability license plate include completing and signing an Application for a Disability License Plate, having a licensed physician or other qualified professional complete Part 2 of the application, and mailing the completed form to the SOS office indicated on it. For more information about Michigan driving rules for seniors, visit the SOS website. The downloadable booklet "Michigan's Guide to Aging Drivers and Their Families" offers safe driving tips, self-assessment tests for seniors, and guidance for family members who have concerns about a driver's safety behind the wheel.
